A BATTLE AT MURFREESBORO.

A General Advance of Rosecrans' Army on Monday.

The Enemy Pushed Back Seven or Eight Miles.

A Sharp Brush on the Nolinsville Road.

A Rebel Gun and Caisson Captured.

Our Army Sweeping Down all the Roads on Tuesday.

A GENERAL ENGAGEMENT IMMINENT.

CINCINNATI, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

The Enquirer has advices from Nashville, stating that ROSECRANS' army had moved on the enemy, driving them before him with considerable heavy skirmishing. The Federals are in high spirits and anxious for a fight. On Monday ROSECRANS' advance was in sight of Murfreesboro, with the enemy in full view, drawn up in line of battle. A battle was expected on Tuesday.

A DISPATCH FROM THE ARMY.

CINCINNATI, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

The following is a special dispatch to the Commercial:

NEAR MURFREESBORO, Tenn., Tuesday, Dec. 30.

The Fourteenth Army Corps made a general advance yesterday, and pushed the rebels back seven or eight miles. COLLINS' Brigade, of Gen. McCOOK's Corps, had a sharp brush with the enemy just beyond Nolinsville. Cannonading took place for an hour, the enemy wasting considerable ammunition. Our troops reserved their fire, until advancing briskly, by a dexterous flank movement, the One Hundred and First Ohio captured one gun and a caisson. We lost one killed, and three wounded.

A general engagement is imminent. Our army is sweeping down all the roads to Murfreesboro. Heavy artillery firing is now heard on the Nolinsville Road, where Gen. McCOOK is engaging the rebel HARDEE. The weather is damp and the ground very heavy.

A LATER DISPATCH.

CAMP, TEN MILES FROM MURFREESBORO, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

Gen. CRITTENDEN reports the enemy drawn up in line of battle on the east side of Stone River, menacing Gen. ROSECRANS. He is ordered to form in line of battle, two divisions in front, one in reserve and covering his flanks, and Gens. NEGLEY and ROSSEAU to close up.

Gen. McCOOK also reports his command on Wilkinson's Creek, seven miles from Murfreesboro. The enemy is in line of battle on Stone's River, from Murfreesboro to Franklin Pike. A similar disposition of McCOOK's forces is ordered as on Gen. CRITTENDEN's line.

It now appears that a great battle will be fought on Stone's River to-morrow, in front of Murfreesboro.

LATEST REPORTS FROM LOUISVILLE.

LOUISVILLE, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

All is quiet south of here, as far as headquarters are advised.

FROM CORINTH AND OTHER POINTS.

CAIRO, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

Information from Corinth to Saturday night states that the garrison at that place were on half-rations. Foraging parties, however, were able to supply the deficiency.

Col. LEE, with a large cavalry force, is still in pursuit of VAN DORN.

Trains are running from Corinth to Jackson, and from Jackson to Holly Springs. The road is also repaired from Jackson to a point nine miles north of Trenton. Every station-house and all the bridges between Trenton and Moscow, within twelve miles of Columbus, are burned. All the bridge-timber along the route is also destroyed, and much of the tracks torn up.

A National force, to the number of 3,000, which had left Trenton in the direction of the Tennessee River, on a reconnoissance, had not returned when the information left.

A construction train left Columbus yesterday. It went as far as Union City without meeting any obstacle. Two regiments and a battery left to-day to assist in putting the road in order. The rebels have evidently left the road. It will be repaired in a week.

FROM ALBANY.

Arrival of Gov. Seymour—Preparations for the Inauguration, &c.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

Gov. SEYMOUR and Lieut.-Gov. JONES arrived to-day. A large number of prominent citizens of the State are in the City, to witness the ceremonies of the inauguration, to take place in the Assembly chamber at 11 o'clock to-morrow. New-York is liberally represented.

The Court of Appeals adjourned to-day. In the Forest Divorce case, judgment was affirmed.

The Missouri Legislature.

JEFFERSON CITY, Tuesday, Dec. 30.

Both Houses of the Legislature completed their organization to-day by the election of all the Emancipation candidates.

There seems to be a general desire that Congress should lead off in the Emancipation movement, and there is no doubt that a prompt, liberal tender of compensation would greatly facilitate the Emancipation measure in the Legislature.

There is a strong prospect that the Senatorial question will be disposed of this week. Under the Constitution of this State a simple majority only is required to pass any bill over the Governor's veto.

FROM THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

An Important Reconnoissance in Force.

A Portion of the Rebel Army Supposed to Have Moved up the Rappahannock.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

A reconnoissance in force went out yesterday morning, which will probably be heard from in a few days.

It is believed here that a considerable portion of Gen. LEE's army has moved from its late position in our front, and gone up the Rappahannock. Its destination, however, is not known.

It has been ascertained by flag of truce that Capt. SWEARENGEN, of the late Brig.-Gen. JACKSON's Staff, who was reported killed in the battle of the 13th, was only wounded and captured. He is now doing well at a farm-house about four miles in the rear of the enemy's front.

Lieut. EDDY, ordnance officer of Gen. WHIPPLE's Staff, is a prisoner in Richmond. He was unhurt on the battle-field.

LETTER FROM DUMFRIES.

Stuart's Raid at Dumfries—A Failure—He is Forced to Retire—Gallant Conduct of the Union Troops—How the Rebels Escaped—Their Programme—The Killed and Wounded—No Government Property Captured or Destroyed.

DUMFRIES, Va., Monday Evening, Dec. 29, 1862.

I have already sent you a brief account by telegraph, of the attack upon this place, Saturday, by a force of rebel troops under Gen. STUART, and should have forwarded another dispatch last night had not Gen. STUART cut off the telegraph wire between this point and Fairfax Station.

From all that we can learn, STUART, with 6,000 cavalry—embracing FITZHUGH LEE's Brigade, HAMPTON's Legion and STUART's own command—with six pieces of artillery, crossed the Rappahannock at Kelly's Ford, about six miles east of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, some time during Friday night, and marched directly to Stafford Church, which is back several miles from the river road, and some twelve miles southeast of Dumfries. At this point, after a brief rest, he divided his command into three columns, each having two pieces of artillery, and in this order proceeded toward Dumfries, arriving within sight of the place at about 11 o'clock A. M., Saturday. Dumfries is surrounded by high hills, thickly covered with pine—the former affording excellent positions for artillery, and the latter almost complete protection to troops from any fire that can be brought to bear. At this time there were only three regiments of infantry, 400 cavalry and two pieces of artillery in Dumfries of Gen. SLOCUM's Corps, all under the command of Col. CAMPY.

As soon as the rebels had taken a position, they commenced shelling the town, and for about five hours, rely upon it, the missiles of war were scattered about in a very reckless manner. The rebel force, greatly outnumbering ours, and having decidedly the advantage of position, the wonder is that our whole force was not either captured or destroyed. The troops under Col. CAMPY, however, kept up good spirits, and manifested a degree of enthusiasm scarcely ever equaled before under such adverse circumstances, and let no opportunity pass to harrass the enemy. The two pieces of artillery were in constant use for about five hours, and whenever the rebels exposed themselves in front of the timber behind which they were most of the time concealed, they were speedily forced under cover again by our infantry. At about 5 o'clock, the enemy retired—doubtless hearing the approach of a force in the rear—without having gained a single advantage. It is surmised that they supposed Gen. STEEL occupied the town, for the building where he recently made his headquarters seemed to be the special object of their hate, and it was completely riddled with balls. Several other prominent buildings in the place were also made targets of, and badly riddled. Our loss is five men killed, and nine or ten wounded. The rebels left 10 dead behind them, and 15 wounded. They succeeded in capturing about twenty of our cavalry before reaching Dumfries, who were patrolling the country, and we captured thirty of their men after the fight commenced. The Union troops, almost without exception, conducted themselves in the most gallant manner, obeying all orders promptly, and with a spirit evincing that their heart was in the work before them.

It seems that when STUART retired, he marched directly to Burke's Station, on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, cut the telegraph wire, and took up the railroad track in several places; captured the telegraph operator at Burke's Station; then crossed the little pike road one mile east of Fairfax Court-house; had a skirmish with a portion of Gen. STOUGHTON's Vermont Brigade; was repulsed; then passed on through Vienna toward Drainesville, and, taking a short turn to the left, passed through Aldie, and, it is supposed, passed through Ashby's Gap, and crossed the Shenandoah at Berry's Ford. STUART had one man wounded and one horse killed near Fairfax, by Gen. STOUGHTON's troops.

One special object of this raid was, no doubt, to capture the Government stores at Fairfax Station, and in this respect it was a most signal failure. He did not succeed in capturing or destroying a dollar's worth of Government property, except what the 20 cavalrymen captured by him had with them, and all he obtained was a few sutlers' teams. These, however, were just from Washington, and were well loaded with all kinds of delicacies. The wagons were burned on the road near Occoquan, and the contents were disposed of by the rebel soldiers on the spot. A man who passed over the little pike road this morning, says he saw a fine assortment of old boots and empty bottles lining the roadside for miles.

MISS BATEMAN AT THE BROOKLYN ACADEMY.—We have space only to state that Miss BATEMAN's reappearance at the Brooklyn Academy was a complete success. The house was well filled by an intelligent and fashionable audience, whose greeting of the fair actress was most cordial. Messrs. WALLACK, ADAMS and DAVENPORT duly supported Miss BATEMAN, who was called before the curtain after each act. To-night, with a capital cast, "The Lady of Lyons."

HINDMAN DECLINES A BATTLE.

A Large Amount of the Enemy's Stores Captured and Destroyed.

Hindman's Army Greatly Demoralized.

The Return of the Expedition to Prairie Grove.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

Gen. BLUNT telegraphs to Gen. CURTIS, under date of Van Buren, Ark., Dec. 28, as follows:

"My long range guns are now shelling the rebel camp across the river, five miles below here. If the enemy does not retreat during the night, I shall endeavor to cross my troops in the morning, and offer them battle.

Among the property captured, are four steamers, three of them partly loaded with supplies, a ferry-boat and a large amount of ammunition.

Quite a number of the enemy were killed."

RETURN OF THE EXPEDITION.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Wednesday, Dec. 31.

Additional particulars of the expedition to Van Buren have been received. Our army was ten miles this side of Van Buren yesterday morning, and would bivouack on the mountain top last night, and expected to reach Prairie Grove again to-day. Gen. SCHOFIELD joined them a few miles beyond the foot of the mountains.

The steamers Nolet, Rose Douglass, Frederick Notrebe, Erie No. 6, and Van Buren, with their cargoes of grain and provisions for the rebel army, were burned; also, a large amount of army stores. The rebels burned their arsenal and ferry boat at Fort Smith, to prevent their falling into our hands, also a large quantity of provisions on the opposite bank of the river. A general conflagration was in progress when our forces left.

Many deserters came into our lines, who report that two regiments of Missourians stacked arms, a few days ago, crossed the river and went home. Another regiment of Missourians left a short time afterward, taking their arms with them. Two regiments of Texans also stacked arms and started for home. A regiment of cavalry was sent in pursuit, but, instead of arresting, they joined the runaways. Everything goes to show that the rebel army of the Trans-Mississippi is completely disorganized.

The Arkansas River is at a boatable stage, and the country bordering on the river, from a point twenty-five miles below Van Buren to Little Rock, is well provided with forage and food to subsist an army.

Our troops are in splendid spirits, having accomplished the most daring and successful raid, without the loss of a single life.

AFFAIRS ON THE FRONTIER.

The Exploits of the Army Under Gens. Blunt and Herron—The Battle of Prairie Grove—Probable Capture of Fort Smith, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CAMP HENNING, FORT SCOTT, KANSAS, TUESDAY, Dec. 23, 1862.

The arrival yesterday at this post of a train of 150 wagons, with a large number of rebel prisoners and over 100 contrabands, from Rhea's Mills, Washington County, Ark., is the first direct communication we have had in Kansas with Gen. BLUNT and the Army of the Frontier, except the telegraphic dispatches announcing the battle and its results, since the splendidly-contested field of Prairie Grove added new lustre to our thrice victorious arms on the Southwestern Border. These victories come in rapid succession, and although not contests upon which seem to rest the fate of the nation, yet they are brilliant episodes, made more glorious by the gloom which the disaster at Fredericksburgh cast about us. Newtonia, old Fort Wayne, Cane Hill, and, lastly, Prairie Grove, all fought against the odds of four to one, and all of them decisive defeats of the rebel forces.

From a letter from a friend with the First Brigade of the First or Kansas Division, under date of Dec. 11, I learn that the army was then encamped between Prairie Grove, six miles south of Fayetteville and Cane Hill, 25 miles southeast, while Gen. BLUNT's headquarters are at Rhea's Mills, and Gen. HERRON's near the Grove. The latter is simply a place where a school-house, church and store makes a point of interest to the neighborhood farmers. The Army of the Frontier is now about 25,000 strong, the Second and Third Divisions from Springfield, under HERRON, by whom the earliest and main portion of the battle at the Grove was fought, numbering some 17,000 men. These regiments are principally Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Wisconsin troops, with a sprinkling of Missourians.

On the 6th inst., Gen. HINDMAN succeeded in flanking Gen. BLUNT, then with the principal portion of his command at Cane Hill, the transportation and supplies being then at Rhea's Mills, seven miles north. HINDMAN's intention was to seize the latter, but Gen. BLUNT, well informed of this, and being reinforced by the advance (cavalry) of Gen. HERRON's command, fell back, and estopped this movement of the rebels. At early dawn of the 7th, Gen. HERRON was attacked by the armies of Gens. HINDMAN and MARMADUKE, and until 2 P. M. gallantly and successfully maintained the contest with his infantry and artillery. At that hour Gen. BLUNT fell upon the rebel rear with the impetuosity and vigor which has marked him and his soldiers since he took the field. The battle became general, the Tenth, Eleventh and Thirteenth Kansas Infantry, with the Second Cavalry dismounted, and the Third Indiana, under Col. PHILLIPS, as skirmishers, led the advance of the army, and several times charged upon the enemy, driving them from their guns and positions. At nightfall the contest ceased, the darkness preventing hostilities, and our men remained masters of the field, Gens. BLUNT and HERRON having broken their lines and met at the cessation of hostilities.

The rebels sent in a flag of truce, and a conference ensued, in which the four Generals participated. HINDMAN asked for an armistice of thirty hours, which BLUNT peremptorily refused. Finally, he granted one of ten hours' duration, for the purpose of burying their dead and caring for their wounded. The rebels took advantage of this and the night to precipitately and ingloriously retreat, leaving 1,500 killed and twice as many wounded uncared for on the field; and for miles in the rear of their disgraceful retreat, at the date of the letter from which these items are derived, there still remained 800 or 900 unburied rebels, most of whom had died of wounds and want of care since the engagement. The necessity of burying the dead and taking care of the wounded, in an almost deserted country had prevented the pursuit of the enemy, except by our cavalry, which followed their rear until within sight of Van Buren, five miles from the Arkansas River and Fort Smith. Our loss—killed, about 800; wounded, 1,200. This includes the entire army.

Since the battle, Gen. SALOMON, commanding the First Brigade, and second in command to BLUNT, has been relieved and ordered to report to St. Louis, as also Capt. WM. FINKLER, A. Q. M. The recall of the first officer to another field of labor has, doubtless, been rendered necessary by the ill-feeling which has grown out of his action in the arrest of Col. WEER, his then superior officer, while in the Indian Territory, last Summer.

This victory of Gens. BLUNT and HERRON will doubtless insure the submission of Western Arkansas to the Federal army, as well as the subjugation of the Indian Territory. The late order of Gen. CURTIS, giving Gen. BLUNT the command of the Eighth, (Western Arkansas), and Ninth, (Indian Territory), Military districts, is a deserved and appreciated compliment to an effective and daring officer, whom his friends believe will not only be found capable of fighting, but of ruling—a characteristic which the services of Gen. BUTLER at New-Orleans, and the exigencies which, already arising and yet to grow, plainly show will be greatly needed in our Generals and military commanders. Gen. BLUNT represents, to some extent, an idea—the practical Anti-Slavery policy which the history of Kansas has taught our people. He is like the community from whom his soldiers come—aggressive for freedom and civilization. Since 1856 it has been the hope and aim of the Kansas Anti-Slavery men to aid in revolutionizing the Southwest—first, by the opening of the Indian Territory; then by colonizing Western Arkansas and Northern Texas and Louisiana, to send forth healthy sentiment and influences which should renew the life of the nation in those quarters. Gen. BLUNT has this ambition. He wants to carve a Free State out of the territory west of Arkansas; and by the healthy surgery of war, cut and cauterize the cancer from Arkansas and Texas. If properly supported, he will do it; not because he is a man of extraordinary ability, but because, more particularly, he personifies the hand and arm, and brings to its support the mental and moral currents which struggle for outlet in these methods.

It is probable that we shall hear of the occupation of Fort Smith by the Army of the Frontier. This will be, we trust, but the prelude to operations which will speedily take place in that region. A new brigade of loyal Indians is to be raised for the purpose of holding the Ninth District. The three regiments now in BLUNT's army will form the First Brigade of this army. The Second will be composed of two regiments of infantry, one of cavalry, and a battery. The 700 Wilichas, now on the Verdigris River, will be mustered, as also about the same number of Cherokees and Creeks, now at Neosho, Missouri, where the women and children driven out of the Cherokee Nation have been moved, by order of Gen. BLUNT, prior to re-occupancy of their homes. The utility of Indian troops, except in specific and special cases may well be doubted. The holding of the Indian Territory, their own homes, may fairly be considered one of these cases, more especially when a large National force shall be East, within supporting distance of them. It is necessary for Gen. BLUNT to occupy this region, and the regiments raised and to be organized will be of service. At least two regiments of efficient volunteers for any service can be raised among the Cherokees, Senecas, Quapaws, &c. A large infusion of white blood, with considerable intelligence and education, can be found among those loyal in the nations mentioned. Gen. BLUNT will then have an army of 18,000 available troops, with a large train of artillery. He will be able to organize two or three regiments of loyal white Arkansians, when once permanently in possession of Fort Smith.

After the 1st of January another and valuable element will be to his hand, through the agency of the Emancipation Proclamation. South of the Arkansas River, in that State, and in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of the Territory, he will find large numbers of undoubted loyal men, black though they be. The Red River Valley in Louisiana, the boundary of Texas and the Indian Nations named, is a rich and slave-populous region. Movements are in operation there. The New-Year's will be the opening hours of a new era. This Red River is the vital nervous centre of the Southwest Slave States. It has for years past been regarded among the insurrectionary doctrinaries as a most favorable point, and is undoubtedly the locality chosen for coming efforts among the slaves. We have got a well-drilled and efficient negro regiment in Kansas. It is the hope of its officers, that by or after the 1st of January, they will be sent through the Indian Territory, in the direction of the Red River. There they will form the avant garde of the Army of the Frontier, and from one regiment will soon grow to a half score. In its ranks are men who have been familiar with every road, ferry, morass, stream, and plantation, from the Arkansas to the mouth of the Red River. It is our hope to receive marching orders speedily.

The post from which this is dated presents a scene of constant activity. The sustaining of even as small an army as BLUNT's necessitates an enormous amount of transportation and supplies. None but the First Division is here supplied, the other two being furnished from Springfield, Mo. The efficient and capable Quartermaster, Capt. INSLEY, A. Q. M. U. S. V., has so organized his department as to secure its moving like clock-work. The same may be well said of Capt. HAMIN, Post Commissary. Major HENNING, of the Third Wisconsin Cavalry, commanding post, is a most indefatigable and valuable officer. The usual train sent forward fortnightly to Gen. BLUNT, consists of not less than two wagons laden with commissary quartermaster, ordnance and medical stores. Each train brings back the wounded and sick to the general hospitals here and at Fort Leavenworth. The next return train will be loaded with pine lumber, many million feet of which now lie at rebel mills in Southwest Missouri and Northern Arkansas. This is to be used for the erection of storehouses. There is at present on hand commissary and ordnance stores sufficient to sustain 10,000 men for three months. Constant arrivals from Fort Leavenworth increases these stores. Capt. INSLEY has now on hand at least a half million dollars worth of clothing. Over two hundred men are employed as laborers, clerks, &c., while enough teamsters cannot be obtained to meet the necessities of the service. The following approximation to the Commissary stores sent by the last train, will give the unmilitary readers some idea of what an amount of stuff must be kept in motion to feed an army of only 8,000 men in the field: Bacon, 25,000 pounds; sugar, 25,000 pounds; vinegar, 1,564 gallons; beans, 28,550 pounds; 103,000 sacks of flour—100 pounds to sack; rice, 6,000 pounds; salt, 31,000 pounds; hard bread, 57,823 pounds; coffee, 19,000 pounds; soap, 6,834 pounds; candles, 1,830. Add to these the quartermaster's, ordnance and medical stores besides those necessary for the escort, and you obtain some idea of the immense mass of materiale used by our armies. To transport this, 160 wagons, each drawn by six mules, were used, which, with spare animals, would make in all about 1,000 mules and horses. All this business goes forward without jar or bustle, under the admirable officers in charge of the various Departments.

We are having warm and delicious Indian Summer.

Secesh Reports of Fighting at Vicksburgh.

From Our Own Correspondent.

KEY WEST, Fla., Tuesday, Dec. 23, 1862.

Our little island was thrown into a very unusual state of excitement on Thursday morning, the 18th, by the arrival of the transport steamer Cosmopolitan, with the Forty-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. T. H. GOODE, from Hilton Head, sent here by order of Brig.-Gen. BRANNAN, to take the place of the Ninetieth Regiment New-York Volunteers, Col. Jos. S. MORGAN, in the garrisons of this place and Fort Jefferson.

There was no previous intimation of this change to the Ninetieth or to our citizens, beyond the expectations of some that such would be the case owing to certain charges and complaints having been preferred by some citizens against the commanding officer, Col. MORGAN, and the Quartermaster, Lieut. R. B. LOCKE. A Court of Inquiry, ordered by the President, is in session—Capt. GOBIN, Judge-Advocate, investigating the charges, which are leveled against their private and not their official acts. The War Department, upon an examination of the record, found nothing to except to in the latter.

It has happened that during this command, now terminated, the great and powerful interest of Slavery has received some of its most damaging blows. This is but the inevitable result of an improving National sentiment, awakening to a sense of its own great responsibilities and necessities, and alive to truth and justice.

Col. MORGAN and his officers have firmly and zealously enforced all orders relating to Slavery, and in doing so assumed the position that the negro should not be punished for failure to labor for his master, or pay over the proceeds thereof. This resulted in the negroes generally seeking employment where they could command pay—some with their old masters, others with strangers. But all have been well employed, and the industry of the island never went on better with the same limited amount of labor. However, this state of affairs has not been satisfactory to those who would not retain their slaves without the lash, and has led to remonstrance and complaints, resulting in the present change of command, and giving us the Forty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, composed mostly of German farmers, accustomed to see every man enjoy the fruits of his labor. We shall await with some interest whatever changes may follow their advent. An effort will be made to reinstate the City Council in all its functions, in order that its be used to compel the slaves to return service to their masters. This, if permitted by the military command, will be attended with more or less of difficulty and expense, depreciating the value of the slaves' services.

It is hoped that all who are interested in slave labor on the island, will soon see their true interest in uniting with those who are now ready, and ask of Congress that all slaves may be freed, here and at Fort Jefferson, with compensation to owners.

Four companies of the Forty-seventh Pennsylvania are to be stationed at Fort Jefferson, viz.: Co. F, Capt. HART; Co. D, Capt. WOODRUFF; Co. H, Capt. CASEY; Co. K, Capt. ABBOTT, under the command of Lieut.-Col. ALEXANDER.

Since writing the above, our commanding officer, Col. GOODE, has ordered the discharge of all slaves from the employment of the Quarter-master, with notice that they will not be sent back to their owners, but allowed to go their own way. This will, of course, place them subject to the action of the City Council, whatever that may be, and I believe that Col. GOODE pledges the assistance of the military to aid in keeping the peace and enforcing the city laws.

The United States gunboat Sagamore, Lieut. Commanding EARLE ENGLISH, returned on the 17th from Indian River, having in tow the schooner Alice, of Nassau, N. P., loaded with cotton, having captured her in St. Lucia Sound. This makes five prizes captured and sent down here during the cruise of the Sagamore, besides burning and destroying several smaller vessels. They made no captures of men on shore, as they were all so much like the deer which they hunt, that they could not be overtaken. There are now twenty-four prizes in this harbor, awaiting the action of the Prize Court.

The transport steamer Albany, with a portion of the One Hundred and Sixtieth New-York Regiment, is now here taking in coal, and doing some repairs to the engine, which became disabled during the rough weather. They were fourteen days from New-York. The transport steamer Cumbria is also taking in coal, having arrived on the 20th, in six days from Boston, with a portion of the Fifteenth New-Hampshire Regiment, Col. J. W. KING. Both are bound west. The Cumbria left on the 22d.

By the transport steamer McClellan, which arrived on the morning of the 22d from New-Orleans, in search of the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Regiment New-York Volunteers, we learn that the great expedition under Gen. BANKS had many of them arrived at New-Orleans, and that Gen. BANKS has relieved Gen. BUTLER in his command—the latter to proceed at once to New-York. Gen. BANKS had sent a force of 20,000 men up the Mississippi, who had taken possession of Baton Rouge, and will hold that and probably every other point of any importance on the river. Through secession papers, they learned at New-Orleans that the fight at Vicksburgh was progressing, and those secession journals were so very moderate in their expectations of successfully resisting, that we may confidently expect that a complete victory has, ere this, removed that obstacle to the free passage up and down the river, and cut off the rebel supplies from Texas. The McClellan took on board the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Regiment of New-York Volunteers, who, it will be noticed, were wrecked on the M. Sandford, and left again at 5 o'clock in the evening. Two of the men were a few minutes too late to get on board, and their disappointment and confusion can be easier imagined than described.

The California steamer Ariel, from Aspinwall, has just entered our harbor (22d, 2 P. M., and the Captain states that he was captured by the Confederate steamer Alabama ("290",) on the 7th of December, on his outward trip, when near Jamaica, and detained for two days. The Captain of the Ariel has stopped here to give information to Admiral BAILEY, and it is very unfortunate that he has not now a vessel at command that is able to cope with the Alabama. We can but hope that she soon may be fallen in with by some one of the numerous steamers that are now in search of her. Several other captures were made about the time of overhauling the Ariel, and it was expected that the Alabama would watch for the return of the Ariel from Aspinwall—fearing which the Captain declined to take on board any treasure, and left the port in the night in a storm, taking an unusual route.

The Captures of the United States Gunboat Sagamore—Five Schooners and Two Sloops Taken Since the 23d of October.

KEY WEST, Fla., Wednesday, Dec. 17, 1862.

The United States gunboat Sagamore returned to-day from a successful cruise off the eastern coast of Florida. She has captured since Oct. 23, seven prizes, consisting of five schooners and two sloops, as follows:

Oct. 23—The English schooner Francis, of and from Nassau, with salt, powder, gin, &c.

Oct. 28—The English schooner Frier, of and from Nassau, with a cargo of salt and miscellaneous articles. The Frier was attempting to run into Indian River when captured.

Nov. 24—The schooner Agnes, in ballast.

Nov. 24—The sloop Ellen, in ballast.

The Agnes and Ellen had run into Indian River, Fla., from Nassau, and had discharged their cargoes. They were captured by a boat expedition, some eight miles down the river.

Dec. 1—The English schooner George, from Nassau, off Indian River, Fla., with coffee, salt and matches.

Dec 5—A sloop, name not known, in ballast, sunk in Jupiter Inlet, Fla.

Dec. 10—The schooner Alitia, while attempting to escape from Indian River, Fla., with thirteen bales of cotton.

All of the above prizes, except the sloop that was sunk, have been sent to Key West for adjudication.

The officers of the Sagamore are:

Employes' Ball at the Astor House.

The Annual New-Year's Eve Ball, which it has been the custom of the Messrs. STETSON, for twenty-five years past, to give to the employes, male and female, of their palatial establishment, came off last evening, in the grand dining-saloon of the Astor House with great éclat.

The Germans have the Sylvester Abend festival upon this last night of the old year; the Danes and Swedes their foaming mead in commemoration of the Vikings; the Italians their nocturnal markets and street merry-makings; the Scotch their barley-brew, and the Hibernians, at home, their midnight usquebaugh; but nowhere, perhaps, in the world—no! not even in Paris, where all classes mingle in the balls that precede and accompany the Jour de l'An—can a more agreeable spectacle be witnessed than was seen last night under the hospitable roof which has become identified with the recent history of the country through the many civic and military fêtes that it has recorded in its diary. The satisfaction communicated to the worthy and estimable persons to whom this annual compliment is given, and the pleasant relations thereby cemented between employer and employe, are sufficient proofs of its good taste and kindly influences.

About 500 persons participated in this year's festival, including many invited guests from the Fifth-avenue, Metropolitan, St. Nicholas, and other leading hotels. Among the young ladies there were very many exceedingly engaging, graceful and elegantly attired, and all exhibited, in port and mien, an innocent dignity which belongs less to wealth and artificial station than to innate merit. Quadrilles, polkas, waltzes and the Lancers, danced with great tact and spirit to the fine music of Dodworth's Band, charmed away the hours, and with them the Old Year. 1863 came tripping in "on light fantastic toe," and mirth, bright smiles and royal cheer surrounded his first appearance on the stage.

Among the crowd of invited guests, boarders in the hotel and gentlemen of the Press, who assisted, there were many who figure in scenes of which the world hears more. Capt. O'BYRNE, of the gallant Thirty-seventh New-York Volunteers, whose gallant deeds on many a well-fought field have gone to history, waltzed and whirled in the merry jig among the gayest. On Friday evening a flag, inscribed by authority of the Board of General Officers, with the record of the battles in which the regiment has participated, will be presented to the Captain, at the house of Aldermen FARLEY, and all the old members of the corps will be present. But, returning to the ball, we would merely add, in conclusion, that to CHARLES STETSON, Esq., who had charge of the entire arrangements, to the polite and active Floor Committee, and to Mr. WOOD, the gentlemanly Major domo, the occasion owed a success that eclipsed its forerunners for many years past. Among the amusing incidents of the evening was a Highland fling, executed orientally by Chinaman ATING, which was a thing both rich and strange. In fact, so brilliant was the whole affair that we had well nigh misspelt the proper name and call the house the Aster.

LARGE FIRE—BURGLARY.

CINCINNATI, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

A fire last night burned ten houses on Eighth-street, and a block occupied by twenty families, who barely escaped with their lives, losing everything but their clothing. The fire spread to three adjacent buildings, which were quickly destroyed. Loss, $10,000 or $12,000.

Night before last, the store of Mr. SCHUBLEN, in Franklin, O., was entered by burglars, who blew up the safe, took $2,700, and set fire to the building.

CITY MISSIONS.—On Tuesday evening, the City Tract Missionary Society, held a meeting in the Spring-street Presbyterian Church, A. R. WETMORE, in the chair.

Statements were made by a number of missionaries, showing a variety of good accomplished, among sailors and soldiers; among German residents, and among the different classes of our population, particularly the afflicted and the unfortunate. Thirty-two missionaries and assistants, with some hundred volunteer visitors, are now exploring the whole length of the island, from the Battery to the Harlem River. The tabled results of the month are fully equal to the general average.

THE NEWS FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ETNA.

PARISIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Actual Condition of British Sentiment.

Further Preparations for the Mexican Campaign.

EXPLOITS OF THE TUSCARORA, &C.

The steamship Etna, Capt. BROOKS, from Liverpool on the 17th ult., calling at Queenstown on the 18th, arrived at this port yesterday.

Her news has been anticipated, in all its leading points, by the Cape Race telegram which appeared in the TIMES of Monday.

The commanders of the Finisterre and the Rhin, two large steam transports at Toulon, had received orders to hold themselves in readiness to sail for Mexico.

The Moniteur, of December 17, publishes the following latest intelligence from Mexico:

"The state of health of the troops is generally good. The only sickness prevailing arises from the fever, the gravity of which diminishes every day. Communication between Vera Cruz and Orizaba is becoming more easy. Twelve days, however, are still necessary to perform the journey. The want of means of transit has prevented the commencement of operations. This state of things has been modified by the dispatch of 1,110 to 1,200 mules, and 280 carts from New-York to Vera Cruz. On the 14th November last, before entering Jalapa, Gen. BERTHIER'S vanguard defeated a corps of Mexican Lancers, demoralizing 1,000 National Guards, who immediately retreated. The enemy lost 15 killed, 35 wounded; 50 saddle-horses taken, and 10 killed. The road was strewn with arms thrown away by the fugitives. The French troops lost two killed and five wounded."

EVENTS IN PARIS.

Opening of the Boulevard Prince Eugene—How Assassination was Guarded Against—Incidents—The Emperor's Speech, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Tuesday, Dec. 9, 1862.

Nothing could be more instructive than the lesson taught by the events attending the inauguration of the Boulevard Prince EUGENE. It was believed, or for several weeks at least it was said, that the Emperor could not pass through the ceremonies of that day without danger to his life. The result was that from the day preceding the 15th of November, when the postponement to the 7th of December was announced, all the large transactions of commerce were arrested. The loss to trade by these three weeks of suspense have been probably as great as any three months of the loss by the American war. I have heard of one instance where even the Minister of Marine arrested, till further orders, the work on a large command of sewing-machines for the use of the Navy Department. Now, notwithstanding these perturbations of commerce, and the general fear, it is probable there was neither complot nor an attempt at a complot. At the first period mentioned for the celebration, it seems to be generally conceded that there was danger of a demonstration of some kind, but the preventive measures for the celebration of Sunday were too well organized to admit of a hope of success, and it is, therefore, safe to say that there was none. But all this shows the rottenness of a system which suspends upon a single man's life the safety of society and the life of commerce.

All the journals of Paris, and especially the liberal journals, were frequently warned through the medium of the private agents of the Ministry of the Interior, not to speak of the reports in circulation in regard to conspiracies against the Emperor's life, and the day before the Inauguration of the new boulevard, they had prescribed to them the following line of conduct: "Say nothing about any hostile demonstrations, and no matter what may happen, follow the description of the Moniteur, and that only." Fortunately nothing did happen, and the description given of the ceremony in the Moniteur is as near true as possible.

But you may desire to know what were the preventive measures of the Government, and how the ceremonies were organized. In the first place, all the garrison of Paris, a part of that of Versailles, and a part of the National Guards, were under arms, and employed in holding, in double files, the edge of the pavement on both sides of the long route of procession. The Place du Trone, where the ceremonies took place, was protected by more than double files of soldiers—there were whole regiments—while all the wine-shops and stores around the Place were closed all day, the Government paying an indemnity for the loss incurred. The Emperor looked heavy and bowed down, which suggested to most people an unusually staunch coat of mail. The hundred thousand employes of the Government at Paris were equally distributed through the crowd to cry "Vive l'Empereur!" and to stop the arms of assassins. The secret police were distributed in bands under the guidance of Brigadiers, who each had their places designed beforehand. The vacant lots and the unfinished houses on the line of the new boulevard were specially looked after by these secret agents. (It was in this neighborhood that the infernal machine of FIESCHI was fired at LOUIS PHILIPPE.) Seats for twelve thousand persons were purchased along the route of the new boulevard by the Government, mostly in the estrades erected on the vacant lots of the Compagnie Immobilière. These seats were made a present to the poor of the Faubourg St. Antoine, and while the act in itself constituted a graceful present on the part of the Government, it served to give safety and theatrical effect to the day's performances by operating as a check to the acts of evil-disposed persons, and by adding twelve thousand more vivats to the general demonstration. If we add to these preventive measures the holding in readiness of all the soldiers within a circumference of forty miles from Paris, we have the enumeration of all the more important precautions adopted.

The result was, that whether these precautions were needed or not, and they probably were not, the inauguration ceremonies went off in fact, as the Moniteur and its copyists will tell you, with perfect regularity and great éclat. The Emperor was really well received along all that part of the line of procession which was official, and I make this sort of reserve because I am told that on the Rue de Rivoli and the Boulevard de Sebastopol he was not received with any marked demonstrations of joy.

In connection with the question of precautions, I ought to mention that the Prefect of Police, M. BOITTELLE, and Staff, and Marshal MAGNAN and Staff rode up and down the line of procession separately, and detached from the Emperor's suite, seeing that everything was in order.

As regards the ceremony itself, you will find the description, with his Majesty's speech, in all the journals. It was computed that there were a million of people on the line of procession, while the procession itself was less brilliant than is generally seen at reviews, because of the total absence of the brilliant and striking uniforms of foreign officers. The whole procession, in fact, only embraced the Emperor and his military household, and high officers of the army, say sixty persons, the Empress and her household, and the Cent-Gardes and a detachment of the Guides.

Most people say that the Emperor's speech is demagogical, and is addressed to a class of people whom he fears. I do not think it will bear so severe a judgment. The new boulevard concerns the poor of the quarter in which it is located, and it was right that on such an occasion he should address himself more particularly to that population and its interests.

To-day the town breathes freer, the funds have gone up immensely, and commercial people—no doubt even the Minister of Marine—have reissued their orders to manufacturers. So that "all is well that ends well." MALAKOFF.

Mr. Cobden on American Affairs and the Sufferings of Neutrals.

In Mr. COBDEN'S remarkable speech on the distress in the cotton manufacturing districts, delivered at Medhurst on the 16th ult., we find the following reference to the affairs of this country:

"The stoppage of the supply of cotton from America we all know has arisen from the civil war that is going on there. I am not going to enter into that subject as a politician. I deprecate very much anything like intervention in the resources of other countries, and I do not speak of intervention by force of arms, but I think that intervention in the way of advice and criticism does precious little good. [Cheers.] There is an old Spanish proverb which says that 'A fool knows more of what is passing in his own house than a wise man knows of his neighbor.' If we always bore that in mind, and left other people to manage their own affairs, it would be a great deal better than if we interfered in them, besides which we should have so much more time to manage our own. [Cheers.] But of this I may say I am quite certain, that Slavery is at the bottom of this civil war in America. [Hear, hear.] I have traveled twice through that country, at an interval of twenty-four years. I have studied it pretty nearly all my life, and I will not go further than this—that I believe Slavery is at the bottom and the foundation of the civil war, and, except in the case of a few conceited, pragmatical, and not over-modest people in this country who profess to know a great deal better than the people can know in America itself, I do not know of any difference of opinion upon this point.

"There is no party in America that does not admit Slavery to be at the bottom of the war. Nobody denies that, whether in the North or the South, whether they be Democrats or Republicans—every one admits that this strife has grown out of Slavery, and nothing else. It is frequently asked, 'Why did England draw this great portion of its supply of cotton from a country where that cotton was grown by slaves?' Well, I think it has been a great misfortune, a great calamity, that the question has been so put. If I am asked whether that could be avoided, I say I think it could not. Many people ask why we do not put a prohibitory duty on American cotton, or a duty, at all events, favorable to the growers of cotton in other countries. Simple and compendious as such a system may seem, how would it have operated? You would have ruined your own manufacturers, for, unless you could have got all the world to agree with you that no slave produce should be bought, you would have offered a premium to other people to set up as rival manufacturers. [Hear.] It has been a great misfortune and a great calamity, and I pray most heartily that, whatever may be the temporary sufferings we have got to go through, we may never return to the time when the vast fabric of this industry shall have for its basis and foundation that odious system of Slavery which exists in America. [Loud cheers.]

"The general prediction has been that Slavery would some day fall from under our feet, and that we should be left without a supply of cotton in consequence of a servile insurrection breaking out, or from some cause of that kind. But you must bear in mind that we are not suffering now from this cotton famine in consequence of any insurrection of negroes, or from the slaves having shown any disinclination to follow their labor in cultivating cotton for the market. The present cotton famine has not arisen from those causes which were sometimes predicted by those who discussed the danger of our depending on slave labor for a supply of cotton. It has arisen out of a war between two white communities in America. The negroes have not interfered, but one white belligerent has blockaded the ports of another white belligerent, and they have shut out the cotton and prevented it from reaching its destination, which was Lancashire and the other manufacturing districts. I am not going at length into that subject now, but I will in passing say that I am wholly opposed to that system of warfare which inflicts heavier penalties upon peaceable non-combatants than it does upon the belligerents themselves.

"In this case we, as neutrals, are suffering more than the Americans themselves, because the system of warfare carried on is that which aims at the obstruction of commerce, even to the punishment of innocent neutrals, such as we are at the present time. [Hear, hear.] I am not going to enter on a discussion of that subject, but I may tell you that it is we in England who maintain that system of commercial blockade against the tendencies of the public opinion of the world. We see now the application of that principle in our own case, and the effect is such that I hope it will awaken public attention to the desirability of a change and alteration of the system. [Cheers.] As I have said, we are suffering more than they are in America, for, except the actual strife in the battle-field, there are no towns in America which are suffering like Blackburn, Preston, Rochdale, Stockport and other towns in Lancashire. It is contrary to natural justice that two communities should fight in such a way that in the process of fighting they inflict greater injury upon communities at peace than upon each other, and when the peaceable world shall have arrived at that opinion another mode of fighting will be found out.

Exploits of the Tuscarora.

From the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

Funchal Roads, in Madeira, have been the scene of certain questionable proceedings by the Federal cruiser Tuscarora. Two steamers, the Giraffe and the Thistle, laden on Southern account, and one of them, at least, flying British colors, entered Funchal Roads toward the end of last month. The Giraffe, after remaining two days, took her coals on board, and got safely away. The Thistle does not appear to have been so fortunate. As soon as she got underweigh, the Tuscarora, it is said, slipped her cable and gave chase. The Tuscararo succeeded in bringing the Thistle to and boarding her. Immediately after the latter operation, the Thistle got away as fast as her machinery could drive her, and would not bring up even for H. M. S. Leopard, which ship had put out for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Thistle had sustained any, and what, injury from the Tuscarora This overhauling occurred, we are told, within gunshot of the Loo Rock Fort, in Funchal Roads. It occurred therefore, in a neutral port, and in direct violation of the laws of neutrality. This is a matter, of course, for the consideration of the Portuguese Government, who will it may be hoped, not permit the matter to pass unnoticed, more particularly as it is understood that the Tuscarora will return to Funchal, if she has not already done so, with the intention of overhauling ships at discretion. It seems to us that the commander of Her Majesty's steamer Leopard would have used his authority to more purpose in preventing the chase and boarding of the Thistle in the waters of Funchal, rather than in running out after that vessel in order to ascertain the extent to which she had suffered from the outrage perpetrated by the Tuscarora. The officers of the latter vessel made no secret of the intentions of their commander to capture the Thistle if the opportunity offered.

The British Government and the Alabama.

From the London Globe (semi-official.)

The Federal Secretary of the Navy has made formal complaint in his report to Congress of what he appears to consider the complicity of the English Government in the proceedings of the Alabama. He tells the world that before that vessel left England the Government were duly informed of her character and purpose, but that they "came too late" to prevent her sailing, and he makes some distant allusion to the possibility of our being morally bound to make indemnification for the injuries inflicted on Federal merchantmen by reason of our connivance or negligence in the matter. Amid the disordered institutions of his own country, the Federal Minister may perhaps be excused for forgetting the character of ours. It may be necessary, therefore, to remind him that we have not martial law in England, and that the proceedings of the Executive in respect of all matters affecting the liberty or property of those residing in the United Kingdom must be regulated strictly in accordance with the law. Whether the interests involved be those of the greatest monarch or the meanest subject, they must be judged alike, and be regulated by the application of what is recognized as law by our judicial tribunals. The law bearing on the position of vessels such as the Alabama has since proved herself to be, is comprised in Act of Parliament known as the Foreign Enlistment Act, which provides that where men are enlisted or vessels fitted out for warlike purposes, other than those of the Sovereign of this country, the Commissioners of Customs are authorized to seize the persons so offending and the vessels, and have the former tried for violating the provisions of the act. But in order to justify the Customs authorities in taking a step of this nature, they must have before them such reasonable and probable evidence of the guilt of the parties as would, primâ facie, warrant the expectation of a conviction. We apprehend that the kind of evidence that would fairly justify interference must not be less than that upon which a grand jury would find a true bill, or a magistrate commit a prisoner for trial. When the Alabama was being fitted out, representations were made by the Federal agents of her character and purpose. The Government was asked to interfere, and the law officers of the Customs had to decide whether the case was one coming under the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act. We believe we are right in saying that the evidence proffered by the Federal agents, on which they proposed that the Government should act, fell very far short of what the Foreign Enlistment Act prescribed as a justification for interfering. It was mainly hearsay evidence, which we need scarcely say is not evidence at all in an English Court. The Federal agents were unable to get information in an authentic and legal shape sufficient to sustain a primâ facie case against those engaged in fitting out the vessel. In the absence of such a case the Customs' Commissioners had no more right to institute proceedings than to seize one of the Cunard steamships, and the Alabama sailed. The manner in which the vessel was fitted out was admirably calculated to evade the law, and as a matter of fact we believe she left England without a single gun or munition of war on board. What Mr. GIDEON WELLES, therefore, would apparently seek to place before the world as a piece of policy on the part of Great Britain, inimical to the North and covertly aiding piracy, is simply a dry question of legal evidence, and the interpretation of an act of Parliament passed in the last century. It was purely a matter of detail to be dealt with by a particular branch of the Executive in the ordinary way in obedience to the law, and not a ground of political action. No interference with the Alabama took place, because there was no legal authority to justify it, and the Government might as fairly be subjected to political reproaches because of the consequences of a decision of a Court of law utterly beyond their influence or control.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Blending with the Christmas and New-Year chimes, we have the royal rhyme of the "King's Bell," rung by the cunning hand of the poet, STODDARD. The story is that of a Prince, who, on his accession to the throne—

> "——commanded all the bells to ring
> A jubilant peal, and bade his heralds say,
> From that time forward every happy day
> Should be so honored."

The only fear the Prince had was, that his happy bells, ringing one incessant triple bob-major, would drown all other sounds in his kingdom. He built himself a palace, having a great dome in the centre, and thereon a golden belfry, wherein—

> "——hung a bell of wonderous tone,
> From which a silken cord ran to his throne,
> Nor only there, but o'er his royal bed."

Thus it will be seen that the King's palace—with the exception of speaking-tubes, and, possibly, hot and cold water—had all the modern improvements. But the happy bell did not disturb the quiet of his kingdom so often as the monarch anticipated. In fact, it did not ring at all. Surrounded by mistresses, and whispering soft nothings in their too willing ears, he did not ring the bell—perhaps because he had not time. As with love, so with the chase, and all other amusements—his happiness never lasted long enough for him to get hold of the bell pull. His Ministers, for reasons of State, chose a wife for him whom he had never seen, marrying him to a girl fresh from convent walls, pure as snow and somewhat colder. Singularly enough he was not happy even then. His wife doled out love to him as a miserly monk might alms, so occupied with her beads and heaven that she quite forgot her husband and humanity. Her only act of wifely duty was to bring him an heir. But Felix did not ring the happy bell when his heir was born, nor yet when his wife died—though the two events were simultaneous. He made wars and won them—as a natural consequence he was worshipped by his people. He reigned on seemingly surrounded by all the elements of happiness, but still the bell, silent as "the harp that once through Tara's halls," &c., never once awoke the tinkling echoes of its golden tower. Old age came upon him and sickness. The Court Physician mixed for him medicaments and potions—

> "——potent, rare,
> Wrung from the kingdoms of the earth and air,
> Strong mineral poisons, each a secret boon,
> Witch-herbs, enchanted by the mystic moon."

You may be sure that, amid all these kind attentions, the thought of ringing the happy bell never once entered his head. Now a shadow hung over the throne, the thick curtain of night was about to fall upon royalty. Tremblingly the King:

> "'Did you speak?
> Who's shining yonder? Look!' His voice grew weak,
> Died to a whisper, while his swimming sight,
> Strained through the darkness to a shape of light;
> Floating across the chamber to his bed.
> 'Agnes!'—he clutched the cord, and fell back—dead,
> Striking in death the first stroke of his knell.
> Thus Felix rang at last the happy bell."

It will be seen that the poet gives us a rhythmical rendering of the old proverb: "No man should write—or ring—himself happy until death." The poem is marked throughout by quiet thoughtfulness and subdued beauty. The conceit on which it is built is an exquisite one though few could have extended it to almost epic length, as Mr. STODDARD has done, without torturing it out of all beauty and freshness. But the minor details of the king's reign are made to fill up the picture without constant recurrence to the central and leading thought of the poem;—the story of his loves and his wars, and the smooth epochs of peace, are so cunningly told, and in measures so sweet and solemn, that the reader's attention is diverted until he reaches the climax of the concluding lines. These last lines are managed with rare art, leaving the reader in doubt whether the King rang the bell by accident or design. To only a man of genius would this delicate treatment have suggested itself. A slight mistake is committed, we think, in the first lines of the poem, where Felix is made by the surface reading to appear jubilant over his father's death, feeling only that it makes him king; but perhaps the poet means us to infer that it was for this unfeelingness or thoughtlessness that he was so punished by an unhappy reign,—at least this is the conclusion which those good people who are always pointing morals will arrive at.

— The Poems of THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH have been several times published in divers tasteful editions, but we do not remember to have before seen them in blue and gold. In this guise they are now presented by CARLETON, and, like old wine in new bottles—although the brand is one upon which the popular taste has already pronounced—they demand in this new phase, new mention. It would be impossible to criticise ALDRICH coldly, and perhaps it were dangerous to do so. He is the very humming-bird of poets—flowers are his natural allies, and perfumes would undoubtedly be the chosen messengers of his wrath.

One word to his disparagement in the hearing of his favorite Tiger-lilies, and the presumptuous critic were forever done for; angered, and he would probably pelt us to death with violets, or smother us under clouds of musk and all manner of Oriental perfumes. Even were it perfectly safe to find fault with the author of this blue and gold volume, we do not know that we would choose to. He is so full of charming little conceits, and quaintnesses, and all unconscious egotisms, that criticism is disarmed, and even Fadladeen himself would feel his soul go out in kindness to so dainty a poet. We have never seen ALDRICH, the man, and the medallion profile of his book gives one a very slight idea of his personale, but we fancy he is almond-eyed. We imagine that he perches himself on a divan when he writes, with turban on head and slippers on feet, and dreams of seraglios and their hushed divinities; of aloes, myrrh and other spices; of everything, in fact, warm and sensuous and pleasant. He is a lotus-eater, and his poems are lotus-leaves. As to language, he weaves sweet little words into wreaths delicate and dainty enough to crown Queen Mab with. "The Ballad of Babie Bell" has some lines that have scarcely a parallel in all other poetry—indeed, it might truthfully be said that other of his poems contain lines that have no parallel anywhere, but in this instance we mean only honest praise, and not what the great showman would call "sarkasm." If there be any who doubt that it is proper to speak of a poem as "dainty," we submit the following one, that they may find a more fitting adjective for it, if possible:

BEFORE THE RAIN.

> We knew it would rain, for all the morn
> A spirit on slender ropes of mist
> Was lowering its golden buckets down
> Into the vapory amethyst
>
> Of marshes, and swamps, and dismal fens—
> Scooping the dew that lay in the flowers,
> Dipping the jewels out of the sea,
> To sprinkle them over the land in showers.
>
> We knew it would rain, for the poplars showed
> The white of their leaves, the amber grain
> Shrunk in the wind, and the lightning now
> Is tangled in tremulous skeins of rain.

"Dainty," by the way, is a pet word of Mr. ALDRICH'S—and here is the chief demerit his otherwise charming little poetries have—the often recurrence of pet words and phrases. In his earlier writings he used to swear considerably in the course of his verse, and the shock and surprise to the unprepared reader may well be imagined, for one would as soon have expected a bullet from a rosebud. We are glad to see that he has dismissed all profanity from his later works; indeed, we believe he has expurgated the oaths from even late editions of former poems. We miss in this blue and gold volume too, a couplet of his that always struck us as being excessively funny, though we do not remember where or in what connection it occurred—something about "the quaint little snakes in the grass" "lifting their silver heads to the moon."

There is another little poem of which we have lost trace, wherein the wind is requested to blow from spicy isles,

> "And strike the roses blind."

No adequate reason was ever assigned, as we could discover, why the roses were to be dealt so fearful a blow in the eyes, and we doubt whether the poet had any—probably it was only a vagary of his. In "Pampinea" of the present volume, there is the promise of better poems than Mr. ALDRICH has yet written, and we shall look for them impatiently.

THE MAGAZINES.

—The Atlantic for January has several notable articles—articles so much above the standard which our magazines seem by some mutual agreement to have adopted, as to deserve special and honorable mention. The first paper of the number, "Happiest Days," by the lady whose pen-name is "Gail Hamilton," furnishes subject for a more extended notice than these columns will allow. It is such a complete and lively refutation, and, withal, such an indignant hurling back of that narrowless platitude about "Childhood's Happy Days," which every one feels bound to fire off on the least provocation, that a committee of grateful children should wait upon the authoress and bring her the best and rarest gifts that Santa Claus brings, as an eternal retaining fee. It is so ridiculously absurd that the poor little mannikin, that has to have its nose rubbed up the wrong way in morning face-washings, and pulled down by unnecessary applications of officious handkerchiefs, as though it were the rope of a cathedral bell—that has all its best thoughts and carefully considered opinions nipped in the brain-bud before they can be blossomed forth in speech by the unasked-for information that "little boys should be seen and not heard,"—whose heads have to submit to as much patting as cakes of butter at the hands of unctuous old gentlemen and snuffy old ladies—who are always helped at table to wing-tips and drumsticks and prohibited from pie on account of their health—whose sympathies are worked upon by missionaries of all sexes and uncertain ages, who persuade them to give the quarter they intended to buy a coveted toy with, to further the education of some miraculous little pagan whose name puzzles them in dreams—it is so ridiculously absurd, we say, setting the cruelty of the thing wholly aside, that in addition to all these and ten thousand other afflictions, the young voyager upon the sea of life should be constantly assured that he is seeing his happiest days, and taught to look forward to the future with a dim, undefined dread, that we have no words to express the indignation with which the mere thought of the outrage moves us, and so refer the reader to the sprightly, sparkling and profoundly logical and philosophical essay of "Gail Hamilton" on the subject.

Miss PRESCOTT'S story of "The Strathsays" is so far beyond the common level of magazine stories in style and thought, so different from them in every respect, that we do not see how any editor could summon courage enough to accept it.

The Strathsays are a Scotch family, settled in one of the British provinces, and the angles and peculiarities of intensely Scotch character—deepened and exaggerated by transplantation rather than modified—its singular reserve and retentiveness, the placidity of exterior, while beneath and below in wildly throbbing veins leaps the live lava of passion, all are portrayed so vividly and yet so quietly that, were CHARLOTTE BRONTE living, or were it known that she had left any unpublished manuscript behind her, the article might be referred to her pen. Where Miss PRESCOTT got her accurate conception of Scotch character from we can easily explain by supposing that she herself is Scotch, but where she got hold of the Nova Scotian Scotch dialect, unless to the Province born, is more difficult to guess. Have we a Blue Nose among us?—is something which we hope to have explained at a future day.

The essay, "Mr. BUCKLE as a Thinker," by DAVID A. WASSON, is well and carefully, yet boldly written; no concession is made to popular prejudices, but the merits of the man are weighed in a nicely poised balance, held by an honest hand. The article on "Iron-clad Ships and Heavy Ordnance," by ALEXANDER L. HOLLEY, will be read with deep attention by all scientific men, and with interest by the general reader. It is a brief summing up of the results of elaborate experiments, and the subject is one to which Mr. HOLLEY has devoted much time and research since the matters of iron armors for sailing vessels and heavy ordnance were first bruited. NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE'S "Recollections of a Gifted Woman" is another of those pleasant reminiscences of England which this favorite author has contributed to the Atlantic from month to month. In its course we have some charming pictures of Stratford-on-Avon. The "gifted woman," to whom reference is made, is the Miss BACON who fancied that SHAKESPEARE'S tomb was made the repositary of some mighty secret, which it was the mission of her life to discover. "The Promise of the Dawn" is a powerfully written story, having special reference to Christmas time and charity, by the talented authoress of "Life in the Iron Mills."

The poetry of the number, although by LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, WHITTIER and Mrs. HOWE—after all there's a great deal in names—is of a rather common order, if we except the "New Lilliburlero" of Prof. CHILDS, a capital parody of the old college song, and brimfull of point and fun. The other articles are mainly good, so that we cannot resist the temptation of crowning this January Atlantic as a king number. Not the least of its many merits is, that it contains the last of "Mr. Axtell," to whose ashes we can heartily say "Peace."

—Harper's for January contains no articles that call for special mention, though its contents are as usual varied, and excellent, with an exception or two. J. ROSS BROWNE'S illustrated article, "A Californian in Iceland," is pithy in text, and pleasant in picture, as his former articles have been, and the whole series, beyond a doubt, will be. In "Cards and Dice," CHAS. NORDHOFF goes as far back into the history of gaming as he well can without unsealing the tombs of the Pharaohs, furnishing a very pleasant, lively article, which he winds up with a statement that should discourage all young men from attempting to win money under such difficulties as are involved by "fighting the tiger," and all similar amphitheatrical amusements. Here it is:

"The systematic pursuit of gaming as a passion, and not as a profession, in England and France, during the last fifty years, led several men of more than ordinary mathematical abilities to make accurate calculations of the real chances of various games. In doing this it was discovered that, in all cases, the "banks" so arranged their games that there could be no positive fair play. In rouge et noir, which was once a very fashionable game in the gambling hells of this country, the certain and inalienable advantage of the banks against the players, made by a peculiar rule of the game, amounts to about 1¼ per cent. on all the moneys staked on one event—or to about 100 per cent. per hour (!) against each steady player. And this deadly odds neither skill nor calculation on his part can in the slightest degree divert. In short:

> "He who hopes at cards to win,
> Must never think that cheating's sin,
> To make a trick whene'r he can,
> No matter how, should be his plan.
> No case of conscience must he make,
> Except how he may save his stake;
> The only object of his prayers—
> Not to be caught and kicked down stairs."

Mrs. STODDARD'S "Tuberoses" is a story of delicate plot, written with a twenty-woman power, bearing the impress of genius in every chapter, and yet tempting the reader at odd intervals to suggest improvements to the author—or, at least, what seem to the most readers improvements. The same peculiarity that we have noticed in her other works, both of prose and poetry, is strikingly manifest in this—a sort of subdued savageness—it is as though she wrote with a tiger's blood, or had a tiger's self bottled down in her inkstand, and the apprehension naturally excited is that the tiger will leap out at some sudden paragraph and do mischief. But with all its faults doubled and tripled and quadrupled, and the sum multiplied by ten, the story would still stand out in happy relief to "A Lost Love and its Resurrection," which precedes it. We look forward with eager anticipation to the day when the public will cease to demand the type of stories indicated by this one last mentioned, or indignantly rise up and protest against them. "HOLE-IN-THE-DAY," by one of the President's private Secretaries, Mr. NICOLAY, is quite apropos to the Indian war which has lately swept like a scathing simoon over the fair promise of Minnesota. HOLE-IN-THE-DAY is one of the most prominent chieftains of that whisky-drinking, squaw-beating, sneaking, scalping race that COOPER and an hundred novelists before and since have delighted to magnify, extol and honor. In "The League of States," the historical and statistical researches of BENSON J. LOSSING will be readily recognized. Further, we have an interesting paper on "The Revolving Tower and its Inventor"—doing justice to the man who so seldom gets either renown or reward, the right one—by A. H. GUERNSEY; "Carlyle's Table Talk," compiled from conversations with Mr. MILBURN, the blind preacher, by the same facile writer; and continuations of all the serials that have so long been standing features in this popular magazine. Miss MULOCH'S "Mistress and Maid" is concluded, and, as we have already said in a notice of the book published some weeks since by the HARPERS, it is entitled to take rank with her best efforts.

—Mr. BIDWELL gives us a very good Eclectic for January, with unusually good engravings. There is more variety in this number than he has been wont to favor us with—fewer heavy articles, and more that are of interest to the general reader. Mr. BIDWELL'S mistake hitherto has been, we fancy, to select the most ponderous articles that foreign periodicals furnished, forgetting that a dinner consisting wholly of meat would be apt to puzzle ordinary digestion. Reviews of works not republished in this country, and about which not one reader in ten cares, can well be left out to give place to those occasional articles enlivened by gleams of wit and brilliancy which even editorial vigilance cannot exclude from magazines, either at home or abroad. We simply make a suggestion to Mr. BIDWELL—he is good-natured and will take it kindly.

—The Jamaica (L. I.) Farmer states that at the Democratic banquet in that city a few evenings since, at which some magnates of that party spoke, one of the guests proposed the health of "Gen. Lee, Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate army." No notice, either by way of approval or condemnation, was taken of the sentiment.

—Capt. Constable, who fought the gunboat Naugatuck in the bombardment of Fort Darling, on the James River, was brutally assailed and beaten by some disreputable characters in the streets of Troy, on Saturday evening, Dec. 27.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

A "Vacancy" of an Office from the "Involuntary Absence" of the Holder of It—New Edition of the Aldermanic Rules of Etiquette Respecting "Advice and Consent" to the Mayor's Nominations.

The Board of Supervisors met at 3 o'clock P. M. on Tuesday.

A communication was received from A. Oakey Hall, the District-Attorney, stating that a vacancy substantially exists in the office of interpreter to the Court of General Sessions, by reason of the involuntary absence of Mr. Kazinsky, under "charges which, even if false, will very materially hampe confidence in a Court interpreter," and asking that his place be declared vacant and a successor appointed.

Mr. TWEED supposed that Mr. Kazinsky was incarcerated in Fort Lafayette.

Mr. WEISSMAN said Mr. Kazinsky was arrested on charges of defrauding the Government.

Mr. TWEED was indignant that the District-Attorney should attempt to defame a man against whom nothing was yet proven.

Mr. PURDY was disposed to shield the District-Attorney from blame in the matter, believing that he acted from proper motives, and with the desire for the public good.

The communication was referred, for an investigation of the whole subject.

The following message from the Mayor was received and read:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Dec. 30, 1862.

To the Honorable the Board of Supervisors:

GENTLEMEN: Pursuant to an act of the Legislature of this State, entitled "An Act in relation to the Courts in the City and County of New-York," passed April 24, 1862, requiring me to appoint not to exceed thirty Marshals of the City of New-York, by and with the consent of your Honorable Body, I hereby nominate the following thirty citizens for such office of Marshal, and respectfully request your advice and consent to their appointment:

Robert E. Bateman, a resident of the First Ward.
Wm. W. Ladd, a resident of the Second Ward.
Chas. F. Watts, a resident of the Fifth Ward.
Ludolph Germer, a resident of the Fifth Ward.
John W. Somerindyke, a resident of the Sixth Ward.
Patrick Collins, a resident of the Fourteenth Ward.
David Coleman, a resident of the Eighth Ward.
John Dunshee, a resident of the Ninth Ward.
Lorenzo De Angelis, a resident of the Ninth Ward.
Jesse Allen, a resident of the Ninth Ward.
Wm. Sibilsky, a resident of the Tenth Ward.
Stephen Lutz, a resident of the Tenth Ward.
Francis Spicer, a resident of the Fifteenth Ward.
Chas. J. Gunther, a resident of the Seventeenth Ward.
Thomas Connor, a resident of the Seventeenth Ward.
John Edwards, a resident of the Seventh Ward.
Robert Stanwood, a resident of the Seventh Ward.
Thomas J. McManus, a resident of the Seventh Ward.
Lloyd Bryant, a resident of the Eleventh Ward.
Lawrence Oberlie, a resident of the Eleventh Ward.
Hugh Nesbitt, a resident of the Thirteenth Ward.
Richard M. Lush, a resident of the Eighteenth Ward.
John F. Cleary, a resident of the Twenty-first Ward.
Edward A. Moore, a resident of the Twenty-first Ward.
John A. Farrington, a resident of the Twelfth Ward.
John P. Mahoney, a resident of the Nineteenth Ward.
Micajah M. Staniels, a resident of the Twenty-second Ward.
Charles A. Clark, a resident of the Sixteenth Ward.
William Wilson, a resident of the Twentieth Ward.
Erastus Powell, a resident of the Twentieth Ward.

Section 14 of the act above cited provides that "every summons, attachment or warrant issued by any of said District Courts must be served by a Marshal of the City of New-York," with the exception of the summons and complaint, which may be served by a competent person, to be designated by the Justice.

The office of Constable ceases to exist with the present year, and the Marshals who succeed them should enter upon their duties on the 1st proximo.

In view of the necessity thus existing for promptly appointing at least one Marshal for each of the eight District Courts in this City, to prevent a stoppage in the operation of those courts, I would respectfully urge upon your Honorable Body that, instead of simply rejecting, without any assigned reasons, the nominations made by me for the office of Marshal, and which have been only of citizens whom I believe to be honest and capable, and from both political parties, you will advise with me as to what particular reasons, if any, exist against their confirmation. The law, as I understand it, not only authorizes, but requires the Mayor himself to name these Marshals, and makes them especially accountable to him, with the power of removal by him.

Nominated by the Mayor, that officer is himself responsible for every nomination made. And I respectfully submit that your action, in providing the Marshals under the act is advisory only, and does not include either by the letter or intention of the law, the right of the members of your Honorable Board themselves to name any of the nominees, much less nearly all of them.

I have deemed this entirely respectful suggestion called for by the fact of your having rejected the twenty-one nominations sent to you on the 26th inst. for you advice and consent thereto, without assigning any reason for such rejection, and, in fact, as I understand, because the members of your honorable Board were not accorded by me the naming of nearly the entire number of officers to be appointed.

I trust that no conflict of this character may arise between your honorable Board and the Mayor. The public interests forbid it, and nothing on my part has occasioned or shall occasion it.

GEORGE OPDYKE, Mayor.

Mr. PURDY was surprised that the Mayor should send such a Message to the Board. He was sorry to have to cast a reflection upon the Mayor, but he must say that the position assumed by him in the Message was a false one. It did not look well for the Mayor to be lecturing the Board about their duty and constructions of law. They had their duty, and the Mayor his, and they knew full well how to fulfill their obligations to the people. Every member of the Board had been elected by as great an extent of public expression as the Mayor had received to elevate him to his present position. In one case, a member had received a larger majority than the Mayor had votes. They were, therefore, as much the representatives of the people, and as much entitled to respect, as the Mayor. New-York being a Democratic City, the Democrats are entitled to the public patronage of the City and County, and as a partisan he had always endeavored to secure as much favor for his party in that respect as possible; but as the law creating the Supervisors divided the Board politically, he had always respected the claims of the opposition and readily granted them a full share of the patronage under the control of the Board. He was willing to do the same in respect to the Marshals. He did not want the Mayor to select Democrats for Democratic Supervisors, because they were fully able to take care of their own affairs, and such Democrats as a Republican would select for office he would rarely be found voting for. The law required their advice and consent to these nominations, and, therefore, in making the appointments they were on an equal footing with the Mayor. The law meant that the nominations should be settled upon by the advice and consent of the members of this Board in private conference with the Mayor, and not that the Mayor should make nominations and they advise and consent to them without participating in the duty of selecting the men.

Mr. DAVIS concurred with Mr. PURDY in his opinion of the bearing of the law on the question.

The nominations were rejected by a unanimous vote.

The Board adjourned until 3 o'clock P. M. of Tuesday next, being the same in respect to membership for next year as they stand at present. They can reorganize for 1863 at pleasure. Being equally divided politically, the post on of President is alternated yearly. It falls to the Republicans next year.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

FINAL MEETING OF THE BROOKLYN COMMON COUNCIL.—The final meeting of the Common Council for the present year was held yesterday afternoon, the object being to confirm the appointment of Commissioners of Deeds for 1863. The names of 104 were presented, when Alderman STRONG moved that all whose names appeared on the list of last year be re-appointed, which was adopted. The Board then adjourned sine die.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS NOMINATIONS.—The Democratic members of the new Board of Aldermen met in caucus on Monday night and agreed upon the following nominations:

President of the Board—Dennis O'Keefe, of the Twelfth Ward.

City Clerk—Henry McCloskey, of the Tenth Ward.

Corporation Counselor—John G. Schumaker, of the Eleventh Ward.

Health Officer—Dr. Louis Bauer, of the Sixth Ward.

Keeper of the City Hall—John A. Flanagan, of the Fifth Ward.

The caucus adjourned until next Friday night to complete the nominations.

THE BUSHWICK-AVENUE IMPROVEMENT.—Judge EMOTT made a decision at the present term of the Supreme Court, declaring the act of the Legislature authorizing the widening and improvement of Bushwick-avenue, in the Eastern District, unconstitutional. He therefore denied the motion for the appointment of Commissioners to estimate the assessments.

DESTROYED BY FIRE.—The United States Hotel at Far Rockaway, owned by Mr. S. WILLIAMS, was destroyed by fire on Sunday morning last. The daughter of the proprietor occupied it at the time, and had some difficulty in escaping with her family. The house was finely furnished throughout. All the contents were consumed.

FIRES.—About noon yesterday a fire broke out in a stable on the corner of Pacific and Willow streets, occupied by Messrs. SMITH & WAKELY, but the flames were extinguished before much damage was done....About 11 o'clock the night previous a stable in Columbia-street, near Atlantic, occupied by J. SMITH and PATRICK BOYLE, was destroyed by fire, supposed to be the work of an incendiary. Loss about $400; no insurance.

PROCLAMATION MEETING.—The colored people of Brooklyn will hold a meeting at the African M. E. Church, in Bridge-street, on Friday evening, in honor of the Emancipation Proclamation of President LINCOLN. Addresses will be made by Mr. WM. WELLS, of Boston, Mr. THEODORE TILTON, of Brooklyn, Rev. R. HATFIELD, of New-York, and others.

NEW-YEAR'S CALLS.—Mayor KALBFLEISCH will receive his friends to-day, at his office, in the City Hall, between the hours of 10 and 2 o'clock.

POLICE APPOINTMENTS.—The Police Commissioners have recently appointed Mr. GEORGE R. RHODES as Captain of the Forty-third Precinct, and Mr. WM. F. SKIDMORE as Sergeant of the Forty-fourth Precinct.

NEW-JERSEY.

INTERNAL REVENUE TAX—NEWARK.—The books of Mr. GEO. A. HALSEY, Assessor for the Fifth District of New-Jersey, comprising Essex and Hudson Counties, show the following totals of taxes assessed on manufacturers products—the same being exclusive of the tax for licenses: September, 65,000; October, $74,000; November, $65,000. Of the above, the highest amounts paid are for ale and beer, some manufacturers paying $8,000 per month. Next soap and candles, then leather, of various kinds, saddlery and harness, clothing, hats, trunks, jewelry, &c. One trunk manufacturer in the Second Ward was assessed $2,500 in the month of September. It would hardly be safe to base a calculation of the revenue which will accrue in the country at large, upon the above figures, as the manufacturing interests of Newark are known to be of extraordinary value and importance.

CENTRE MARKET, NEWARK.—The annual report of the Clerk of Centre Market, Newark, shows the receipts for rent of stalls, &c., for the year, to have been $10,267, a slight increase over 1861. The whole number of loads of hay weighed on the city scales has been 7,213, being an increase of 540 over last year. The Centre Market is to be extended by a recent order of the Common Council, by roofing over a large space now occupied by country wagons. This is a much needed improvement, as it will enable the country people to dispose of their produce comfortably, and not be exposed to the elements, as they now are, the discomfort of which forces them to be in haste to dispose of their loads to middle-men, who, of course, charge the consumer two prices.

ARREST OF A COUNTERFEITER.—A man, giving his name as RODNEY F. CARTER, was arrested in Newark, on Tuesday night, about 9 o'clock, for attempting to pass two counterfeit bills, one a five on the Huguenot Bank of New Paltz, N. Y., and the other a ten on the City Bank of New-Haven, Conn., at the store of Mr. BERNARD NAUGHTON, grocer, No. 22 Williamstreet. CARTER professed to be the keeper of a billiard saloon, corner of Third-avenue and Forty-third-street, in this City.

STATE PAY TO VOLUNTEERS.—The State pay to the families of Newark Volunteers, which is paid by the Mayor monthly, will be disbursed at the Office of the Volunteer Aid Committee, corner of Broad and Clinton streets; commencing on Friday of this week and continuing until Thursday of next week.

NEW-YEAR CALLS.—Mayor BIGELOW, of Newark, will receive his friends to-day at the City Hall. Chief Engineer SODEN, and Chief of Police WAMBOLD, will also be at home to their friends at their respective residences.

GEN. TORBERT SEVERELY ILL.—Gen. TORBERT, the gallant commander of the First New-Jersey Brigade, has been obliged to return to his home in Philadelphia, owing to a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism. He left his command on Saturday last, being carried on a mattress.

A PROSPEROUS PARISH.—The congregation of St. John's Church, (P. E.,) Elizabeth, have just raised by voluntary subscription the large amount of $10,000 for the purpose of liquidating the church debt.

LAW REPORTS.

Notes of Prize Decisions.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT.

Before Judge Betts.

CLAIM OF OWNER TO BE LOYAL—TRADE WITH THE REBELS.

The United States vs. The schooner Gen. C. C. Pinckney and her cargo.—This vessel was captured by the Ottawa on May 6, 1862, about fifty miles from Charleston Bar, having come out of Charleston under the rebel flag. She was laden with cotton and resin. She was registered to Hermann Koppel, a citizen of the Confederate States, on April 16, 1862, as having been conveyed to him on April 7, 1862, in Charleston, by a resident and citizen of that place. These papers, her crew list and the appointment of Koppel as master, were all authenticated by the rebel authorities at Charleston.

Koppel intervened in the suit and claimed as matter of defence that his fealty to the Confederate States was simulated and illusive; that he was never a subject of that Government nor willingly associated with it; that he was a native of Prussia and loyal to the United States, and that the vessel and cargo were purchased by him with the proceeds of his own industry with intent solely to rescue such proceeds from the rebel Government and withdraw himself and family and property from the Confederacy.

Held by the Court—That the Court can deal with the matter solely on the principles of the prize law, applicable to such a state of facts. That on the facts his claim cannot be considered in this tribunal, but if any relief exists for him it must be by application to the United States Government.

That his own written acts, supported by his oath, prove the vessel and cargo to be property of the enemy States. He covertly withdrew it from a blockaded port, where he had been for years a resident. He assumed allegiance to the rebel Government by covering his property with the Confederate flag.

That if he was still a loyal subject of the United States, he could not question the legality of the seizure of his property acquired in the enemy country by trade with the enemy.

Vessel and cargo condemned as forfeited.

For the United States and captors, Mr. Andrews and Mr. Upton; for claimant, Mr. Davega and Messrs. Beebe, Dean & Donohue.

Judgments of the Policemen Against Fernando Wood—The Motions Open the Defaults.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Barnard.

Leighton vs. Wood and Three other Cases.—These were motions to open defaults and set aside inquests taken in the cases brought against Mr. Wood to recover for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiffs by reason of and during the Police riots of 1857. The facts are familiar. On Friday last the matter was adjourned until now, that Justice BARNARD should decide whether he would hear the motions, it having been objected that at the time of the riots, or shortly before, he had in some way acted as counsel to Mr. Wood. Justice BARNARD decided to hear the motions, and they were now argued and decision was reserved.

Gilbert Dean and Edwards Pierrepont for motions; D. & D. D. Field opposed.

The Homicide on Board the Ship Francis B. Cutting—The Accused to be Discharged on Bail.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Barnard.

Matter of Henry Oliver.—The prisoner is charged with the murder of the second mate of the ship Francis B. Cutting, for which he had been committed to the Tombs. He was now brought up on habeas corpus, and a motion was made to admit him to bail.

The depositions taken before the Coroner were read on the motion, and it was urged that the prisoner should be discharged on a small amount of bail, as the unfortunate man who met his death threatened to kill the accused, and struck him violently at the time of the shooting.

The Justice expressed his intention to discharge the prisoner on bail, and stated that he would fix the amount on Friday. The prisoner was remanded until that time.

Edwin James and Thomas Dunphy, for the prisoner; District-Attorney, for the People.

About a Business Contract—Charges and Counter-Charges.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Justice White.

Edgerton vs. Bloomer & Macbeth.—This was an action to terminate an agreement between the parties in respect to the business of desiccating potatoe, the plaintiff alleging that the defendants represented to him that they could use a certain process, when in fact they had no right to use it. It was also alleged that the defendants had collected moneys which had not been credited on the books, and which they had denied receiving.

The defendants, in answer, alleged that they had the right to use the process claimed by them, but that by common consent another process was used as preferable. The defendants denied that they had denied the receipt of money, and alleged that its not having been entered on the books was occasioned by delay only of an ordinary business character.

The defendants also charged that the plaintiff did not understand the process of manufacturing, and that so soon as he had learned it he was desirous of getting rid of them, (defendants) and use the knowledge so obtained in a business connection with others; and that as soon as he had broken up the business by injunction proceedings in this case, (which injunction was set aside) he formed a new concern at the same place with other persons to carry on the same business.

They also claim that the agreements upon which the action was founded, expressly stipulated that they were not to be considered partners in any respect. The case was briefly stated in the TIMES of the 27th. It is now adjourned to the 25th of January, Talcott & Averill for plaintiff; R. Wynkoop for defendants.

Liability of Indorsers—How Charged as Such.

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM.

Before Justices Daly, Brady and Hilton.

Albert S Case et al. vs. John Bradburn.—This was an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action brought to charge him as guarantor of the genuineness of a prior endorsement upon a check negotiated under the following alleged circumstances:

One J. A. Stewart, who was a clerk of one A. Hoag, was, as appeared, indebted to the defendant in the sum of $50. In payment thereof, and as alleged, without any authority from Hoag, he indorsed and delivered to the defendant a check on the Bank of Commerce for $50—payable to the order of Hoag.

The defendant, who was at the time a depositor in the Chemical Bank, placed his name on the back of the check solely, as alleged by him, for the purpose of designating his ownership thereof.

The Chemical Bank declined to receive the check for collection, and the defendant then delivered it to his clerk, directing him to get it cashed at the Bank of Commerce. That bank refused to cash it, as he was not identified, and was unknown to them. The check was then returned to Stewart, who, as claimed, took it, and went with defendant's clerk to the plaintiffs' place of business and requested them to cash it, as he (Stewart) was not known at the Bank of Commerce. Plaintiff cashed the check, the name of the defendant remaining thereon, and Stewart handed the $50 to the clerk, who delivered it to defendant.

The check in course of collection passed through the American Exchange Bank and the Bank of Commerce, and was duly paid, until the makers came to settle with Hoag, who, as alleged, refused to allow the payment, averring that he had never received it.

The check was then returned through the bank to plaintiff, who soon after brought this action.

Judgment was rendered for the defendant on the trial, and plaintiff appealed on the ground that the defendant is liable to them as innocent holders of the check, for value, as guarantor of title and the genuineness of prior indorsements. On the other hand it was contended that these guarantees are incident to a transfer, and not to an indorsement, and that the only course by which the defendant could be made liable was by charging him as an indorser, by demand and notice.

Decision reserved.

J. J. Torrance for appellants; John T. Doyle for respondents.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Our advices from Tennessee, this morning, are extremely important. Gen. Rosecrans made a general advance with his army on Monday, against the rebel army at Murfreesboro, and at last accounts up to Tuesday, heavy fighting was going on at various points. The rebels were pushed back seven or eight miles on Monday, a portion of Gen. McCook's Corps having a sharp brush with the enemy beyond Nolinsville. The enemy here wasted much ammunition during an hour's cannonading, and finally lost a gun and caisson through a dexterous flank movement made by the One Hundred and First Ohio. Our army, on Tuesday, was sweeping down all the roads leading to Murfreesboro, and heavy artillery firing was heard on the Nolinsville road, where McCook's progress was disputed by the rebel Gen. Hardee. A general engagement was imminent, and has probably been fought before this time.

Gen. Blunt informed Gen. Curtis, on the 28th ult., that his long-range guns were then engaged in shelling the camp of the rebels under Hindman across the Arkansas, five miles below Van Buren. He expressed the determination, if the enemy did not retreat during the night, to cross his troops over in the morning, and offer battle. Among other property captured at Van Buren were four steamers, three of them heavily loaded with supplies; a ferry-boat, and a large amount of ammunition.

A later dispatch, dated Fayetteville, Dec. 31, states that Gen. Blunt's expedition had returned to Prairie Grove—having failed, we presume, to induce Hindman to give battle. All the enemy's stores captured were destroyed. The enemy, also, in their flight, destroyed an immense amount of property on the other side of the Arkansas, including their arsenal and ferry-boat at Fort Smith. Many deserters came into our lines, who reported great demoralization in Hindman's army, several regiments having stacked their arms and left for home.

We learn from headquarters of the Army of the Potomac that a heavy reconnoitering force started out on Tuesday morning, from which intelligence was expected "in a few days." It is believed that a considerable portion of the rebel army has moved up the Rappahannock, and it is probable that this reconnoissance has been projected for the purpose of obtaining information as to the rebel movements.

It was reported yesterday, on the authority of a dispatch from Fredericksburgh, published in the Washington Chronicle, that the rebel Stuart, with his cavalry, had again entered Maryland; but according to the Washington Star of last evening, the report was a hoax, founded on the fact that a few guerrillas crossed the Potomac to Harrison's Island, at Ball's Bluff, on Monday night, but recrossed again on seeing that their motions were observed from the western shore.

Admiral David D. Porter writes from Cairo, to a friend in Philadelphia, "That he will capture Vicksburgh on or before the 1st proximo, and present it to the nation as a New-Year's gift."

We have an interesting budget of news from Key West this morning, our correspondence being to the 23d inst. The change in the command of the post had been effected, Col. Joseph S. Morgan and the Ninetieth New-York Volunteers, giving place to Col. T. H. Goode and the Forty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. This change, our correspondent intimates, is the result of complaints made by the slaveholders of the vicinity, who have been much dissatisfied with the course Col. Morgan has taken regarding their "chattels." The United States gunboat Sagamore had arrived from Indian River, having in tow as a prize the schooner Alice, of Nassau, loaded with cotton. The Sagamore had captured five prizes during the cruise, and burned a number of small craft. At the date of our correspondent's letter, there were twenty-four prizes in the harbor of Key West, awaiting adjudication. The Banks transport steamers Albany and Cambria had called to take in coal. The steamer McClellan had arrived from New-Orleans, and taken on board the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Regiment New-York Volunteers, who were on board the transport M. Sandford when she was wrecked. She brought intelligence of the progress of the Banks Expedition up the Mississippi as far as Key West, and rumors obtained from rebel papers that a fight was going on at Vicksburgh.

It is stated that while Morgan was at Elizabethtown, Ky., he was busily engaged in using the telegraph to Louisville. He sent a dispatch to Gen. Boyle, telling him that he had better appoint another Superintendent for the Louisville and Nashville Road, as the present one had recently erected some very bad bridges, and he should be forced to tear them all down.

On Dec. 28, at Indianapolis, the Cumberland River was reported as still rising. It is now in good condition for small boats.

Two schooners were taken into Baltimore on Monday evening, prizes to the United States revenue steamer Hercules. They were captured by armed boats of the Hercules, under the command of Lieuts. T. G. Baker and Hall, at the head of one of the Virginia rivers which opens into Chesapeake Bay.

The result of the election for member of Congress from the Norfolk, Va., District, is announced to be in favor of J. C. McLeod.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Board of Aldermen met at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and concurred in making the appropriations (amounting to $47,197 06, and chiefly for interest on the Family Aid and Union Defence Fund bonds) which the Comptroller recently discovered had been omitted at the time the regular appropriation bill was passed. The Mayor's veto on the resolution increasing the salaries of the Police Justices to $5,000 per annum, was taken up and overruled. The Comptroller reported that, for the fortnight ending on last Saturday, $67,836 had been disbursed from the Relief Fund, to 16,549 families, of whom 16,450 were adults, and 22,237 children. The Board adjourned till 10 o'clock A. M. on Friday,

The Board of Councilmen met at 5 P. M. yesterday, and took up the Fractional Currency bill, which was passed over the Mayor's veto by a vote of 16 to 5. The Board also concurred with the Board of Aldermen in increasing the salaries of the Police Justices. After some other routine business, the Board adjourned to Friday, at 10 A. M.

The steamship Ella Warley, Capt. Schenck, from Havana on the 28th ult., calling at Key West on the 26th, arrived here yesterday. The Havana dates are four days later, but without importance.

During the month ending Dec. 4, 8,000 bales cotton rags were bought in the Liverpool market, and 3,000 bales in London, for shipment to the United States. These purchases consisted chiefly of Egyptians, at 13s. 6d.@14s. 3d. for white, 11s. 6d.@12s. 3d. for blue, and 10s.@11s. for colored, with a considerable quantity of Japan blues at about 13s. Since the bulk of these purchases were made, prices have advanced, and Egyptians have been sold at 15s. for white, and 13s. 6d. for blue. The Liverpool market is now quite bare of stock.

The Money Order bill, in connection with the Post-office Department, will pass soon after reassembling. The limit of a money order will be $30, for the payment of which a fee of fifteen cents will be charged. A payment of $10 will be entitled to a commission of five cents, and of $20 to a commission of ten cents. The system will be found a very convenient and useful one, and when fairly under way, the surprise will be general that it was not long since adopted.

The Albany Evening Journal makes the following statement: Gov. Morgan tendered his resignation of Major-General on the 22d, to take effect Jan. 1. He has no knowledge that his successor has been designated. He has not drawn one cent of the pay he is entitled to as Major-General.

The Oil City Pennsylvania Register, in its review of the oil trade for the last week, says: "The market has been dull, and transactions limited. There has been a persistent effort on the part of buyers, both in Pittsburgh and the Eastern cities, to break down the prices that have ruled for the past few weeks. In a measure this has proved partially successful, and prices have declined. But the European advices by the last steamer being favorable, the market is getting stiffer. A considerable amount of oil has been shipped to Pittsburgh in the last few days. The warehouses are nearly empty, and the stock on hand is lighter than at any time during the present season. From the Creek we learn that prices have declined, the producers lacking storage, and have to sell or see their oil waste. The range of the week is from $3 50 to $5, with but small sales."

Sir Alexander Bannerman, Governor of Newfoundland, it seems, will not help those who refuse to help themselves. Great scarcity of food prevails among the fishing population, and he has been petitioned to aid those in want; but, in reply, shows that the shore fishery gave at least a fair return last Summer, that those who have been industrious and economical provided enough for their Winter's support, and that he declines to give Gorvernment aid to the idle and extravagant, as any show of returning to a system of pauper aid when the means of independence is within the grasp of common energy, is one the Government will not countenance.

The citizens of York, Pennsylvania, intend presenting to Maj.-Gen. William B. Franklin, U. S. A., a splendid sword, for his bravery and gallantry in the battle of Fredericksburgh, Va.

The Stock Market was again very buoyant yesterday, closing the old year with a higher market than we have reported since October. Gold, 133¾; Exchange, 146¼.

Less activity was discernible] in Breadstuffs on Wednesday. Flour advanced 5c. ₱ bbl., and Wheat 1c. ₱ bushel. Corn was a shade cheaper. Very moderate transactions were reported in Pork, Beef, Butter, Cheese, Rice, Sugars, Molasses, Oils and Whisky. A good inquiry prevailed for Hay, Hops, Bacon and Lard. Rio Coffee was more freely purchased. Cotton was salable and buoyant. No important changes transpired in other branches of business. There were 560 vessels of all classes in port.

Our State Government—Gov. Morgan, Gov. Seymour, Gen. Dix.—Yesterday was the last day of the term of Gov. Morgan as Chief Executive of the State of New-York. To-day he lays down the emblems of office, and Horatio Seymour assumes them. Doubtless, the outgoing Governor will have a lighter heart on the occasion than his successor. The civil war yet rages, and New-York, as first in population and wealth, must still be the leader of the loyal States in the work of suppressing a causeless and bloody rebellion. With Gov. Morgan, the line of duty was followed as a labor of love. He was in sincere sympathy with the General Government, and had no care except to do his utmost in whatever direction the National authorities desired his coöperation. He surrenders his arduous post with no regret, but that which all good patriots share with him, that their efforts in the nation's behalf have not yet had a fuller reward.

Gov. Seymour finds himself in a much more embarrassing position. He represents now the sovereign power of this great State. He knows it is loyal and true to the Union, from its centre to its circumference—in its pocket, pursuits and intellect. It hates treason as it learned to hate it when the angry guns of Charleston harbor first rained their infernal fires upon the National flag, and buried it in the smoking ruins of Fort Sumter. Gov. Seymour represents New-York's loyalty as well as its sovereignty. He knows that loyalty recognizes the Administration at Washington as the embodied sovereignty of the United States, just as he embodies the sovereignty of this State. Whatever loyalty, therefore, he expects and has a right to expect to be exhibited toward himself, as the Constitutional Governor of New-York, by all citizens of the State, he is bound to exhibit to the Administration at Washington.

Gov. Morgan was nominated by the President a Major-General of Volunteers, to facilitate the military operations, so vast and important, in this chief State of the Union. The office was held by Gov. Morgan, merely as a State convenience, not for rank or pay. In leaving the Chief Magistracy, Gov. Morgan resigns his military office and functions, and to the vacancy the President has assigned Maj.-Gen. John A. Dix. Gen. Dix is peculiarly fitted by education and public service for the duties of the post. He and Gov. Seymour were life-long political associates, and will prove, we hope, agreeable and effective co-workers in the employment of the entire military and moral power of the State for the suppression of the rebellion.

The New Year and the War.

In our review, yesterday, of our military successes during the year that has closed, it was made very apparent that the rebellion could not survive another twelvemonth of similar experience. It was shown that the reduction of a like amount of territory to the old flag in 1863, as in 1862, would literally wipe the Confederacy from the face of the earth. Considering the present magnitude and splendid condition of our army, and the superb fleet of gunboats just completed—which will not only be able to gain possession of the three remaining Southern ports, but to ascend the Southern rivers far into the interior—it is certainly not unreasonable to believe that the restoration of the National authority can proceed, to say the least, as rapidly hereafter as it has heretofore.

We are too apt to estimate the prospects of the rebellion, not by its actual fortunes, but by the loud tone of its leaders and organs. The rebel Government, and all the newspapers, are protesting with greater vehemence than ever, that submission to "the old concern" is a thing utterly impossible; that the last dollar of property and the last drop of blood shall first be spent. This kind of talk is rather imposing, but, allowing it to be ever so earnest, it really deserves no more heed than the wind. Nothing is more common than for men to protest, even when nearly exhausted, more loudly than ever that they will die sooner than give in. Close upon the heels of their tremendous defeat at Cerro Gordo, the Mexicans created a Dictator with absolute power for everything except the conclusion of a peace; and when the American army was not three miles distant from the halls of the Montezumas, the Mexican Government issued a proclamation to the provinces to come to their aid in mass, and by fire or poison, by any weapon, in any manner, to injure and destroy the invader. If it be said that Mexico fails in backbone, can it be so said of Russia? It has gone into history that no nation in the world, when once aroused, is capable of a steadier enthusiasm and more prolonged endurance than Russia. Up to the close of her second campaign in the late war with the allies, and three months after, she exhibited no signs of yielding. All the reverses and discomfitures she had experienced in one almost unbroken line from the commencement of the struggle, in no degree, if appearances were to be trusted, subdued her defiant spirit. To the overthrow of Sebastopol itself, she had nothing to answer but an order for a new levy of 400,000 men; and from the Czar to the lowest serf, there was no feeling manifest but that of sullen, determined resistance to the last extremity. At the commencement of the third year, Richard Cobden, who, before the war, had declared in his seat in Parliament that "Russia might be crumpled up like a sheet of brown paper," published a pamphlet, entitled What Next, and Next? maintaining that Russia was unconquerable, and that peace must be made with her on any terms; and yet that same month of January had not ended before the Czar signified his desire that the war should close, and accepted terms which not only conceded all the points originally in dispute, but others of a yet more humiliating character. In every hard contest, the pride of the worsted party is always the [illegible] quality to yield; and, as a general [illegible] tongue grows defiant as the [illegible]

[illegible] show the spirit of the South to be ever so resolute, yet it is no index whatever of what is to be the length of the war. This is not a question of disposition or of purpose, but a question of resource and of ability. We may rely upon it that the rebel leaders will maintain the conflict just as long as they have it in their power to deal a blow. When the people behind them are once thoroughly penetrated with the conviction that further resistance is absolutely ruining them, and not until then, shall we hear them solicit peace. It takes time to produce the results which are to work this conviction; but the conviction itself, when it once fairly comes home, will [illegible]den in its manifestation and speedy in its effects. We shall probably see the rebellion one month all defiance, the next all submission. We are to judge of its duration by the effective causes at work against it, not by its present temper; by the superiority of our armies in numbers and equipment—by the impossibility that the rebels can raise another army, when their present one is destroyed—by the power of injury possessed by the naval expeditions—by the hardships inflicted by the blockade—by the constantly increasing financial straits—and not by any tone however lofty, or any spirit however obstinate.

We may take it for granted that this war, like others, will run to its legitimate termination—the disablement of the weaker party—and will then stop. When that point is once reached, the Southern people, as every other people under like circumstances have done, will acknowledge and act upon the necessities of the case. The final pacification will be the less difficult, because it will involve no humiliating terms, such as the worsted belligerent usually has to accept. Nothing more can be required than a renewed acceptance of the Constitution of our fathers—devotion to which is a glory, not a shame. Yet we don't pretend this resumption of allegiance will be altogether easy. A certain sullenness must continue for months, perhaps for years. We shall never look for such a display of jubilation at the South over the restored Union as that which signalized the return of the Stuarts to the English throne, amid flying flags, sounding bells and music, bonfires innumerable, and streams of wine and ale; or as that which marked the French Restoration, when the Bourbons came back in the person of Louis XVIII., and loyalists, liberals, proprietors, merchants, agriculturists, artisans, clergy, Vendeans, Republicans, Catholics, Protestants, seaport towns, provinces, capital—all France hailed him as their great deliverer. In the one case, thirteen years of army rule over civil power, and in the other case, twenty-five years under the nightmare of the Revolution, and the mocking dreams of the Empire, had prepared men to go wild over almost any change. The trials under secession, severe as they have been, will not have continued long enough to produce any such violent reaction. Let peace come as it may, it will, at best, take time to heal all the old passions.

But it is useless to speculate about these sequels. It is enough to know that the business of the present year is strenuous, unremitting war. There are the strongest reasons for believing that if the Government, the army and the now loyal people are faithful in this, the old flag will wave triumphantly in every State and County in the land before the year closes. But if instead of faith and harmony and tireless energy, we are to have despondency, distraction and delay, there is no depth of discomfiture and shame to which the year may not reduce us.

The Alabama—The Responsibility—The Remedy.

Fifteen months ago we entreated the Government to build a few very fast war vessels, for the distinctly specified purpose of catching pirates; and we called attention to the undoubted principles and facts of steamship performance, to prove that such vessels could be constructed at a moderate cost and without risk of failure. Since that time the rebels have not only procured the "290," but have inflicted with their one ship, in the short period of a few weeks, more damage upon our commerce and disgrace upon our Government, than our whole navy has done to them since the capture of New-Orleans. While high officials have denied not only the feasibility of attaining high speed, but the importance of employing it, the "290" has achieved one of the most brilliant successes on record, solely and exclusively by reason of her high speed. And of all the immense and costly navy created by our Government, with the full knowledge of modern steamship improvement, not one of the vessels of the Department's own design will exceed ten knots at sea, and, according to present evidence, not more than one of their purchased vessels will catch the "290."

Appreciating, in some humble degree, the immediate importance of gunboats and light draft and good speed, to occupy the then defenceless rivers and harbors of the South, we communicated, two months before the Department invited the first estimate for the construction of such vessels, with the leading engine and shipbuilders, to ascertain when a small fleet could be got afloat. We learned that a number of better vessels than the Department vessels turned out to be, could have been put into service at a date prior to the appearance of even the Department's specifications; and we urged the Government to avail itself of the plentiful artisans and tools then unemployed. The Bureau of Steam Engineering had not, indeed, been idle. Any expert will testify that two months was little time enough to complicate that usually simple machine, the steam engine, in the manner which the Bureau did finally specify. Meanwhile various builders and contractors offered to build and guarantee a superior class of vessels for this service; but their offers were declined. Everything had to wait till the Bureau could perfect its plans, and show the world, for once, how to build gunboats. Well, after most of the enemy's rivers and harbors had been fortified, the Department's vessels appeared. It is true that they were slow and deep—it is true that their boilers and engines were above the water-line, and thus exposed to shot—it is true that their machinery was so monstrous that it could not be completed in the short time that would have sufficed for the unofficial style of steam-engine—but, then, everything was on a scale of princely grandeur, entirely regardless of expense, and quite in keeping with the magnitude of the occasion.

Twenty months ago—long before the Department had commenced, or, as it would appear, contemplated the construction of iron-clad war vessels, and while certain officials high in authority had not only sneered at the idea of such vessels, but had actually declined to communicate on the subject, we urged the Government to undertake the construction of iron-clads, and referred to the European practice and experiments, which had already proved the feasibility of this new method of warfare.

Well, after the rebels had partially completed, among other iron-clads, a ram which was destined to sink two of our frigates, hold our fleet in Hampton Roads at bay for a whole season, cover the fortification of the James River, prevent the coöperation of the navy with the army of the Peninsula, and inflict infinite damage on our cause—after this, the Department concluded to build the Galena, which was riddled with shot and put hors du combat in her first action, and the Ironsides, which, like other ironsides of the same construction, can be punched by the shells of Whitworth and Blakely, who manufacture artillery and projectiles for the rebels day and night; and, singularly enough, Ericsson, after great labor and perseverance, was allowed to begin the Monitor. Meanwhile, Stevens, with the fastest vessel in the world, three-quarters done, was thrown overboard just as often as he applied for aid. And to fitly end this really sublime chapter of naval history, the Department has now invited and received proposals for the construction of ten iron-clads at four millions, two hundred thousand dollars apiece—a million and a half more than they ought to cost—to be plated in a manner which the whole practice of the world has proved utterly inadquate. End did we say? No—after the appointment of the Chief of one of the Bureaux concerned had been officially objected to, a higher authority insisted on his having the place. Despite all the failure, and mortification, and loss due to the inefficiency of at least some of the Bureaux of this Department, there is no change. Is there any power that can deliver us from this depth of misfortune? We believe there is. No cost or pains are spared in investigating other disasters—let Congress convene a Board of Engineers and men of science, who are really familiar with the best practice of every country and locality—men who are neither wedded to ancient precedent nor determined to carry out their own notions, right or wrong. Let such men determine, after thorough examination, whether we are necessarily to be beaten by English and rebel engineers and shipbuilders. We are certain that the President and the authorities, who ultimately control these matters, will not hesitate to act when they know the facts. The trouble is—and, indeed, it could not be otherwise—that superiors, having no professional knowledge whatever, can be humbugged by subordinates, and made to believe that the world at large is all wrong. With the "290" right before their eyes, some reason or other why fast war-vessels are a failure—which, if not plausible enough to unprofessional men, is at least quite unanswerable by them—will be trumped up for the occasion. While every member of society deems himself competent to discuss finance, foreign relations and military strategy, even the head of the Navy Department would no more think of prescribing the engine, boiler and hull that should save him from the "290," were he in her track, than the medicine, instruments or operation that should save him from death were he torn by a rebel shell.

In short, since the Heads of Government are not experts in naval construction, they are simply at the mercy of their subordinates, until these subordinates are either indorsed or condemned by a still better authority—the Board of Experts, which we call upon Congress to establish at once. Let no legislator who has a voice or a vote in this matter underrate its importance. It is a startling fact, that the supremacy or worthlessness—the speed or sluggishness—the power or weakness of the Navy—the right arm of the Government, and its chief reliance in case of foreign war—no less than this, is at the mercy of a small, self-willed, unapproachable clique of men, whose patriotism and good intentions we do not purpose to question, but whose professional works have already covered the nation with disgrace.

We refer our readers to a communication, in another column, for further facts in illustration of the degree of professional wisdom which has thus far presided over this department of the public service.

The Pursuit of the Alabama.—When the rebel Stuart, with two or three thousand cavalrymen, made his raid around our army in Maryland, it was said that nearly twenty thousand of our troops were put in motion to capture him or prevent his escape back into Virginia. The difficulty in that case was, that while Stuart and his men rode horseback, the greater part of those sent to catch him had nothing to ride on but their own shanks.

It is somewhat the same in the case of that raider or rover of the high seas, the Alabama. There are eighteen steamships (as will be seen from the list in another column) now engaged for the pursuit of her. Sixteen of these are screw propellers and two of them paddle steamers. Thirteen of them have been at sea some weeks, engaged in hunting up the buccaneer, and five of them are under orders to sail, and will start speedily. Those now out are scouring after their prey over almost every sea on the globe, from China to Peru, from the Mediterranean to both poles; and the five now under orders will, we suppose, all be dispatched for duty along our Southern coast, and down to the Caribbean Sea. We refer, in another article, to the defect under which all these vessels labor; but, notwithstanding their deficiency in the great essential of speed, we should think that between them they might succeed in cornering the Alabama, and putting some iron into her soul. As the land pirate, Stuart, however, has just made his appearance on the borders of Maryland, with the purpose of commencing depredations on loyal soil, may not the equally daring Semmes also unexpectedly turn up closer to loyal waters than even the Caribbean Sea, and would it not be well for one or two of our fast cruisers to keep a bright lookout for him on our North Atlantic coast?

Gov. Morgan.—Some of our neighbors are again assailing Gov. Morgan on the charge of drawing pay as Major-General of Volunteers, in addition to his salary as Governor. This is either very careless or very malicious on their part. In his Message to the Legislature, a year ago, Gov. Morgan stated that he had accepted the appointment "on account of its practical advantages to the service, although of course not intending to receive any of its emoluments." It is scarcely necessary to say that he has not drawn a single dollar of his pay as Major-General during the time he has held the office.

Post-office Arrangements for New Year's Day.—The Post-office and the sub-stations in this City, will be kept open to-day until 12 M. The carriers will make their first delivery at 8 o'clock in the morning, an improvement over the old practice, the delivery on holidays having heretofore been omitted. The lamp-post box collectors will make their first collections at 8 A. M., and their last at 8½ P. M.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON.

The Emancipation Proclamation to be Made Public To-Day.

MEDIATION RUMORS.

The President and the West Virginia Bill.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

Washington, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION.

The Emancipation Proclamation will be made public to-morrow, and copies have been sent to-day to the Generals commanding in the field. As we have before stated, it fully sustains the promise of the former one. The Proclamation was the subject of warm discussion to-day in a special Cabinet meeting, which was called at 10 o'clock this morning. All its points were not fully indorsed by all the members present, and it is said that it is not very cordially sustained by Postmaster-General Blair or Secretary Stanton

PROJECTS OF COMPROMISE.

There is mediation in the air. On the eve of New-Year it seems probable that the anniversary may be made an occasion for organized efforts for compromise. This notion is favored by the speech of Mr. Brooks in New-York, the boldness of whose treason vouches for some unseen support at this time, when the rebelli on is being surrounded and literally crushed out. All talk of negotiation comes from the rebels, or their allies, either domestic or foreign.

THE FINANCES.

Somebody is to be disappointed. The members of the Committee of Ways and Means met again to-day for consultation, and learned that Secretary Chase had abandoned his late intention of modifying the bill he has submitted. This determination is quite recent, and was communicated to a member of the Committee last evening. His wish is, that the Committee shall report his bill as submitted, but this conflict of views will render impossible. The Committee will, therefore, proceed at their next meeting to prepare a bill embodying the views of the majority, as substantially set forth heretofore in this column, and that bill will be submitted to Congress at a very early day. As it seems nearly impossible that either Committee or House will indorse Secretary Chase's Bank measure, and as he regards its success essential to the financial safety of the nation, it is more than probable that he may again shortly resign the position he has so admirably filled.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Senator Welling and Representatives Brown and Blair, of Virginia, have had a full conference to-night with the President, and left full of confidence in his approval of the bill admitting West Virginia as a State into the Union.

GEN. M'CLELLAN.

A dispatch was received here to-day from Gen. McClellan, to the effect that he will be present to testify before the Porter Court-Martial on Friday next. His evidence is expected to embrace an explanation of the famous dispatch to Gen. Porter, after the second battle of Bull Run, which is said to have been sent at the request of the President, who feared that the Army of the Potomac might not fight as well under Pope, without some such exhortation, as they had done under Gen. McClellan.

STUART'S MOVEMENTS.

Gen. Burnside to-day received a dispatch from Gen. Slocum, confirming the previous statement that the rebel Stuart, in his late raid, had with him a telegraphic operator, who when a telegraphic station was seized, commenced conversation with the war office here—thus gaining some useful information. Several important dispatches were also seized, and some sent to different points within our lines, with the intention of misleading us in our operations.

There is no truth in the statements telegraphed last night to New-York, and published here this morning, that Stuart had crossed with a portion of his cavalry into Maryland. Our best intelligence confirms the belief that the saucy freebooter, this time unsuccessful in his enterprise, has hastened to escape Col. Wyndham's pursuit through the passes of the Blue Ridge.

SECRETARY SMITH'S RESIGNATION.

Secretary Smith attended a special Cabinet meeting, to-day, for the last time, and formally gave in his resignation. He left the city at 5 o'clock this afternoon, in order to open the Court assembling in Indianapolis on Monday next.

COMMISSIONER DOLE.

Indian Commissioner Dole returned last evening from a short trip to Baltimore and Philadelphia, whither he went on business connected with his Bureau.

INTERNAL REVENUE INCOME.

The receipts of the Internal Revenue Department are very encouraging. The amount received on Monday and Tuesday was about a quarter of a million of dollars each, and Commissioner Boutwell anticipates a speedy enlargement of this figure. He seems rapidly getting the machinery in successful operation, and will soon have it completely systematised.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

The rumor that Mr. Doolittle is a candidate for the Department of the Interior is unfounded, and the belief grows every day stronger that Judge Usher has the inside track.

MILITARY AGENTS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Col. J. H. Puleston, who has for the last year and a half been the military agent for the State of Pennsylvania, to-day resigns that office on account of the urgency of private business. His successor is understood to be Col. Quay, and he will achieve a decided success if he shall be able to discharge the difficult and responsible duties of the office with anything like the efficiency which has distinguished the administration of Col. Puleston.

PURVEYING ESTABLISHMENT BROKEN UP.

By order of the Surgeon-General, the Medical Purveying establishment at Columbus, Ky., has been broken up, and the medical supplies removed. Reason, the too close proximity of the rebels.

DESERVED PROMOTION.

Second Lieut. Edwd. M. Knox, of the Fifteenth New-York Light Battery, has been promoted for gallantry to a First Lieutenancy, and appointed Ordnance Quartermaster.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

CLAIMS FOR DRAWBACK.

The following is the evidence to be made to the Commissioners of Internal Revenue when a claim for drawback has been made: First—The certificate of the Collector of Internal Revenue that the internal revenue tax has been paid, which certificate shall, when possible, particularly describe the goods by their marks or otherwise, their quantity, the rate of tax, whether specific or ad valorem, the amount of duty imposed, and the name of the manufacturer or producer who paid the same. Second—The certificate of the Collector or other competent officer of the customs, to the effect that the goods upon which the drawbacks is claimed have been exported, and the name of the exporter. Third—The affidavit of the party making the claim, or other competent person, setting forth that the goods upon which the claim for drawback is made, are the identical goods upon which the internal revenue tax has been paid, as certified by the Collector of Internal Revenue, that the same goods have been exported at the time and in the manner stated by the Collector of the Customs, and also the amount of the drawback claimed, and that the party making the claim is justly entitled thereto. This affidavit must be executed before a Notary Public or Magistrate having a seal; or if executed before a Justice of the Peace, then it must be a certificate from a proper officer that such person is duly authorized to administer oaths.

THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION.

It is ascertained that the President's Emancipation Proclamation will not be ready for publication till to-morrow.

COURT-MARTIAL OF GEN. PORTER.

Testimony of Brig.-Gen. Griffin, Brig.-Gen. Reynolds, Major Hyland, and Brig.-Gen. Sykes.

Special Report for the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Dec. 30, 1862.

The examination of Brig.-Gen. Charles Griffin was resumed:

To the Judge-Advocate—At the time we halted on the Gainesville road, as I stated in my evidence, a trooper came up and said, "Look out! a man has been taken in front," referring to a cavalryman. I asked what forces we had in front; he said none a few cavalry, referring to our forces.

TESTIMONY OF GEN. REYNOLDS.

Gen. John F. Reynolds, Brigadier-General Commanding Pennsylvania Reserves, was the next witness. He testified that he was attached to Gen. Porter's Corps, and his command was among the first troops of Porter's Corps that joined the Army of the Potomac. After leaving Rappahannock Station, I was temporarily attached to Gen. McDowell's Corps, but remained with Gen. Porter's Corps, not having come up yet. On the night between the 27th and 28th of August, my command was at Buckland Mills, between Warrenton and Gainesville. We were on the march until after dark; did not march during the night; we bivouacked at Buckland Mills, going into camp just about dark. It was a very dark night, as well as the succeeding night; I recollect both nights distinctly; I should consider it too dark a night to march troops through an unfamiliar country off the roads without a guide; I do not think it possible to march troops on such a night without a guide, or on a road, very precarious, if the roads were very bad in places.

Gen. Hunter suggested that it was not necessary to get the General's opinion on all military questions.

Mr. Eames, Gen. Porter's counsel, remarked that he was trying to prove that the roads were not passable on the night in question.

On the morning of the 28th, after passing Gainesville for some distance, my column was directed to the right to march on Manassas; found the country such that I put my command in three columns, one brigade in each column, and the artillery in the intervals. The country could be so broken, wooded and obstructed that I was obliged to form into the road leading along the railroad, leading to Manassas Junction, Between New-Market and Groveton the country was very much cut by ravines, and wooded. I recollect that from near New-Market I passed over it. From New-Market to the Warrenton pike, near Groveton, I think no command could have passed over that country with artillery in order to move in presence of an enemy. On the 28th, in the afternoon, I was on the left of Gen. Sigel's command, engaged with the enemy, who was on the right of the Warrenton pike. Gen. Sigel moving obliquely across the pike. I have no knowledge of Gen. Porter's position; think it was three miles from him, across this broken country, between my left and what I understand was his position, was broken country. On the 29th, before 4 P. M., the character of the battle was principally artillery; the infantry firing must have commenced between four and five o'clock. I refer to the part of the field near me. I served with Gen. Porter on the Peninsula up to the time that we left Harrison's Landing. I have had opportunities to judge of Gen. Porter's conduct. I have always considered Gen. Porter a faithful, energetic and devoted officer.

To the Judge-Advocate—I should suppose it proper to march troops on the night of the 27th, if they had a guide who professed to be, and was acquainted with the road. There was firing of infantry at 11 A. M., at intervals; do not recollect any very heavy volleys; I meant to say that it was impossible to maneuvre troops between New-Market and Groveton; it would have been very difficult to get up artillery. The circumstances were no disadvantageous to the enemy, except that the enemy had a road, a turnpike leading down directly into the position of which the enemy did make use of, which gave him an advantage; if Gen. Porter's command had engaged the enemy about sunset on the 29th, I am hardly able to give an opinion as to what would have been the result; if he had made a successful attack on the enemy, the result of the contest might have been different; I do not know now what position Gen. Porter's troops occupied at sunset.

Q.—Assuming that Gen. Porter's position was on the Gainesville road, in a position to attack the enemy's right flank at sunset, what would have been the effect of an attack upon the enemy by 10,000 fresh troops at sunset?

Gen. Porter objected that the question assumed that the witness knew where the enemy's right was, and what it was.

Q.—Do you know where the enemy's right was?

A.—I was on the extreme left of the troops facing the enemy, their right toward sunset; it was extended across the pike, and their troops were coming down the Warrenton Pike. Up to twelve or one o'clock it was across the pike; I had made an attack on the enemy's right with my division, but was obliged to change front to meet the enemy coming down the Warrenton pike; I was forming my troops parallel to the pike when I was obliged to change in consequence of the enemy's reinforcements coming in on the right down the turnpike. The enemy continued to come until the, formed, and extended across the pike.

Gen. Porter withdrew his objection to the previous question, which was then put.

A.—A vigorous attack made there ought to have resulted in our success, and have contributed toward it, certainly.

The witness [illegible] on the map the character of the country between his position and that occupied by Gen. Porter.

Testimony of Gen. Reynolds continued—On the night of Aug. 27, I suppose my command was about 10 miles from Warrenton Junction. I think the enemy's right on that night late at night, about dark. My division lost its connection for a time from the remainder of Sigel's Corps, and at sunset we had closed to the right so that I think the enemy did our flank us; that is, I think his flank extended beyond us, though distant. I think that on the 29th the enemy did occupy a position partially between mine and that which I understand was occupied by Gen. Porter. I had no knowledge at the time where Gen. Porter was. I knew the troops were at Manassas, and I expected to have them brought out on my left, but they were not brought out. I think that force of the enemy was a heavy force. I think the enemy did not pass over much of the country which would have had to be crossed by Gen. Porter to attack the enemy's right. I think the enemy was between that broken country and our position that day, occupying a ridge which crossed the turnpike. The enemy had the advantage of having the Warrenton Pike open to him; his forces passed down that pike, and filed off that pike, I suppose, to occupy the ridge.

To the accused—My statement as to the possible effect of an attack by Gen. Porter on the 29th on the right of the enemy, was made upon the assumption that he could have made that attack undimpeded. The movement of the enemy gathering on that ridge on Saturday was unopposed for the greater part of the morning. Suppose they were unopposed until they made their attack; suppose the attack to have been made from twelve to two o'clock; I suppose the enemy's effort to draw around Gen. Pope's left flank commenced on the afternoon of the 29th.

TESTIMONY OF MAJOR HYLAND.

Major Hyland, of the Thirteenth New-York, Second Regiment First Brigade, Gen. Morell's Division, was the next witness sworn: He testified that on the night of the 27th he was with his regiment on the march from Kelly's Ford to Warrenton Junction arrived in camp about dusk; they were very much fatigued, worn out and in need of provisions; had no provisions that day of any account; marched about 3 o'clock the following morning; on the morning of the 29th we were on the march from Bristow to Manassas Junction; from the Junction we went on the Gainesville road to the front; on the afternoon of the 29th our regiment was employed as skirmishers; we were to the front of Morell's Division; were so employed from about 1 o'clock on the afternoon of the 29th until daylight of the 30th; the Twenty-second Massachusetts and Berdan's were on our left of the enemy; the enemy was in our front during that time; they commenced forming between 2 and 3 o'clock; they came from the direction of Thoroughfare Gap, and appeared to be two columns along the railroad and filed to our right.

The witness indicated on the map the relative position of his regiment and the enemy.

Testimony of Maj. Hyland continued: The enemy passed to our front and to our right; I could hear them very distinctly; the enemy formed to attack during the day; I could hear the commands plainly, as if forming in line, and the artillery getting into position; the artillery to the right opened upon us; not the artillery directly in our front.

To the Judge-Advocate—The country between us and Morell's Division was open, and there was a deep ravine and stream. In front of us it was heavily timbered. The force of the enemy in front appeared to be a heavy force—probably a larger force than we had. I reported these forces to Col. Marshall, my commanding officer; think the force was sufficient to make a successful resistance to Gen. Porter's entire corps; could not state the thousands, but the force of the enemy was very heavy, indeed.

To the Court—I should think there were probably ten thousand troops in front of us by the columns of troops I saw in front of us in the same direction; I take into consideration the location of the enemy as giving comparative strength to his position.

TESTIMONY OF BRIG.-GEN. SYKES.

Brig.-Gen. Sykes was the next witness sworn, and testified: I commanded a division in Gen. Fitz-John Porter's Fifth Army Corps. I was in Gen. Porter's tent on the evening of the 27th of August, when Capt. Drake DeKay arrived. About 10 P. M. Gen. Porter sent for me. We were then in his tent, with Gens. Morell and Butterfield, and Capt. Drake DeKay. Gen. Porter informed me that he had received an order by the hands of Capt. DeKay, directing his corps to march at 1 o'clock on the morning of the 28th. We talked it over among ourselves, and thought that nothing could be gained by moving at midnight, or 1 A. M., rather than at dawn. I was very positive in my own opinion, and gave Gen. Porter the reasons. They were, first, that a night march is always exceedingly fatiguing and injurious to troops; that my command had already marched twelve to fourteen miles that day; that I thought the darkness would cause confusion; that a constant stream of wagons had passed ahead of us during the day my command reached Warrenton until dusk; and above all, I thought that as to the hours to elapse between 1 o'clock and daylight, my men could march in much better order and much more rapidly than if they were to march at the hour prescribed. I might add that Gen. Porter made his decision not to move till dawn. I take it that that decision was based upon his own opinion and the opinions of the three general officers in his corps next in rank to himself. I can't say that the hour of movement was fixed at 3 o'clock. Reveille was beaten in my division at 2 or 2½ A. M., and the advance was sounded as soon as I could distinguish the road. I generally allow an hour and a half, or two hours, between reveille and advance. The night was unusually dark. Before I directed the advance to be sounded, I sent an Aid-de-camp to find the road. He returned, and stated that the darkness was so great that he could not distinguish the road. He told me that he was assisted in the search by several soldiers. As I anticipated, we ran upon this train of wagons within two miles of my camp. They encumbered the road for miles. Myself and staff officers were constantly engaged in opening the way for the head of my column. On several occasions I had to take my mounted escort and place them on the road with drawn sabres, to prevent the wagons from closing up any interval that occurred. I do not think I ever had in my military life so much trouble as I had that day. The wagon masters and teamsters were alike insubordinate. About two miles from Bristow Station a stream crosses the road. On the Bristow side of that stream Gen. Porter stationed officers, and directed them to compel all these wagons to park, so that none of them could precede my troops. That order was carried out. I was compelled to halt my command on the Bristow side of that stream, at the head of it, for a full hour, in order that my rear brigades might be united with the brigade in advance. Nothing would have been gained by starting at one o'clock. If there was any military necessity for the march at one o'clock on the 28th it did not appear when we arrived at Bristow. Gen. Pope was there after we arrived. About half-past ten A. M. my command was put in post on a line in advance; remained there all that day, encamped that night, and did not leave until an early hour on the 29th. Gen. Pope being there in person, the only inference is that he sanctioned our camping a that place. My men, when we reached there were fresh, and could have gone anywhere, where it was desirable. On the 29th, I was with Gen. Porter throughout the whole day. The order received by Gen. Porter from Gen. Pope was received about sunset, a little before dark. During the month of August, I was in continuous intercourse with Gen. Porter. I have never seen any slackness or indisposition to do his duty to his command or his country. Gen. Porter is an officer whose zeal is so well established that I hardly see the necessity of such a question. I would like to add that Gen. Porter evinced a promptness for the wants of his command, and his attention to the routine of his command is so great that I have often thought that he trusted too little to the capacity of his division commanders; he seemed to do everything himself. I consider that he pushed his command forward pretty vigorously from Falmouth up to the scenes of the 30th.

To the Judge Advocate—I do not know the officer who bore the order of Gen. Pope on the 29th; I think that some Aids-de Camp of Gen. Porter were sent out. I think Capt. Monteith was. Gen. Porter did not make known to me the character of the order. I continued with Gen. Porter all night. The order was received. I had no knowledge that Gen. Porter was commanded to attack the enemy on his right flank. I do not think that the urgency of the command being at Bristow Station was made apparent; if that urgency had been made known, we would have moved at the hour prescribed.

Gen. Pope's order to Gen. Porter to move to Bristow Station was here read to the witness, but he could not identify it.

Testimony continued.—Knowing the obstructions we had to encounter, having considered the darkness of the night, I thought we might reach the point we desired to move at daylight as well as if we moved at that hour; those considerations would have influenced me as they did, not to move until dawn. I cannot say that Gen. Porter criticised the military conduct, strategy or generalship of Gen. Pope on the 27th, 28th or 29th of August. We commenced the march to Bristow Station on the 28th of August, as soon as we could distinguish the road. My command was about 4,750 men. I led the column, and continued the march to Bristow, with the exception of the usual halts to enable men to pass to the rear.

Some further questions were asked the witness on cross-examination; the substance of the replies elicited being that if he had been in Gen. Porter's place, he would have done the same thing, and marched for Bristow Station at daylight instead of one A. M. as ordered by Gen. Pope.

The Testimony of Gen Burnside.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Dec. 31, 1862.

The presence of Gen. Burnside in the Porter Court-martial, to-day, attracted a large attendance. Gen. Burnside was warmly greeted by all present who knew him. He testified for Gen. Porter as follows:

I am Major-General Commanding the Army of the Potomac. In August last, while Gen. Porter was on the march to join the army of Virginia, he was under my command, with orders to protect the line of the Rappahannock and its fords. I requested and directed him to send by telegraph and otherwise what information he could gain concerning the military situation in Virginia at that time; I received such information verbally and written; I regarded the sending of such information, and the conclusions of accused thereon, as official acts done by him in the performance of his duty, under my direction; my relations to Gen. Porter as to forwarding his troops were such that I did not consider it necessary to be always formal, or always to give written orders for all that I desired him to do; I was temporarily in command at that point, and the forces were to be forwarded through me; there was not always formality observed, because there was not time for formality; our communications, though informal, were entirely official—that is, a number of them; so informal were they that I might have sent communications that I do not know anything about. I may not have kept any copies of them. There was not time for anything of that kind. From my observation of Gen. Porter's military conduct, and from my knowledge of him as an officer, I have never seen anything which led me to think that he was not a zealous, faithful and loyal officer.

To the Judge-Advocate—I received no impression from Gen. Porter's dispatches that he was not inclined to do his whole duty as a subordinate in command to Gen. Pope—no impression of the kind. I saw in Gen. Porter's dispatches a very great lack of confidence in Gen. Pope's management of the campaign—an opinion which was not confined to Gen. Porter. I saw what I called to the attention of Gen. Porter himself—what might have been indiscreet, but nothing to lead me to suppose for one moment that he would not do his whole duty. So much was I impressed that way that I consulted with an officer of my Staff with reference to forwarding these telegrams, and we both decided that there was nothing more in the dispatches than a lack of confidence. We decided to send them, because they were the only means of communication with Gen. Pope, and the President of the United States came to the telegraph-office every morning, at seven o'clock, and requested of me all the information I had to send him; I did not feel authorized to withhold anything from him in my possession as to what was doing on that line; I sent them to Gens. Halleck and McClellan—copies to each; I consider that Gen. Porter was not removed from my command positively until after he was relieved entirely from all the duty of guarding the fords; he furnished me with all positive information within his knowledge; I had the impression that we were entirely disposed to coöperate with each other; so much was this the case that I had constructed as rapidly as possible a telegraph along the line of the Rappahannock, with a view to communicate with him; I took care to forward his supplies even after he had joined Gen. Pope, because I had heard from him and from others that there was a lack of supplies, and after the last day there I think he must have received a large wagon load from me for the purpose of supplying his command; my communications were kept open particularly with Gen. Porter, and troops that were withdrawn from my command; I felt more of an obligation to keep communication up with them; I cannot indicate the moment when I heard Gen. Porter express verbally a lack of confidence in Gen. Pope; I mean by my answer to convey the idea that I took my impressions from the dispatches to express just about that much; his dispatches must have been from the time he reached Catlett's Station, previous to the army going to the rear; if I mistake not that was the first thing that I locate; if I mistake not, there was nothing very striking in the first dispatch—it was about the others going to the rear, great confusion, some trouble with troops marching on the roads, and such things as that; I had telegrams sent me, that I forwarded, that I did not even save copies of, and have not looked at from that date to this; I recognize this dispatch sent from Warrenton Junction to me, dated 9 P. M., Aug. 27; that was the first; I am not prepared to say that he did not express opinions to me at that time, but I cannot locate them; after he was ordered to join Pope he moved his troops off rapidly, marching at night; everything within my limits showed that he was determined to get his troops up as rapidly as possible; I saw nothing to indicate the reverse; I heard him express as much on the Chickahominy, Harrison's Landing and Aquia Creek; two members of the Court can give evidence as to the occasion I refer to.

Q.—Are you of the opinion that the impressions in the army with regard to Gen. Pope were of such a character as might have a tendency to the embarrassment of his military operations?

A.—I think they were; that is the general impression. My impressions as to Gen. Porter's lack of confidence in Gen. Pope were not all derived from Gen. Porter's dispatches; I felt that he did not have confidence. Still, I cannot locate what I have heard him say—not a word; I am compelled to give that answer, though it may seem contradictory; I do not remember to have heard Gen. Porter say one word against Gen. Pope; these expressions of officers concerning Gen. Pope's inability to conduct the campaign, were relative to Gen. Pope's mode of execution of the plans, rather than to the plans themselves. These expressions were not confined to the army of the Potomac; I never listened to and never heard any objection to the plan that made any impression on me, but there was a strong distrust as to Gen. Pope's ability to carry out that plan, in consequence of the (blank.) I cannot see what bearing this could have upon the case if I answer it, but I will do so if the Court requires it. I think the question is answered sufficiently. (The Court acquiesced.) I cannot tell when Gen. Porter was relieved from the command of the fords. I sent the relief to him as soon as they could be started. I think Porter joined Pope's command before he had been entirely relieved from guarding the fords. After Porter joined Pope, he was in no way under my command, except to make these reports, and to be supplied by me. I understood that, as far as military matters were concerned, he was under Pope's orders. There was probably no greater joy anywhere in the United States than in our camp when Gen. Pope sent his dispatch that he had beaten the enemy. We felt like cooperating; I saw every effort to do that. Gen. Halleck's dispatch to me and my answer will, I think, explain more of the feeling we had in reference to that matter than anything else. The dispatch was that Pope had been successful; I sent back word that we were all jubilant.

Q.—Was not the impression, mentioned by you as existing among the officers, of a want of confidence in Gen. Pope, more an expression as to the man than to his capacity as a commanding General?

A.—I think it was; I do not think it was the impression of the officers generally that Gen. Pope, notwithstanding he was admitted to be a talented officer, was up to the task of conducting so large a campaign; I do not think that opinion was caused by his appointment to the command of the Army of Virginia, or the questions of rank which it involved; I do not think that had the slightest effect upon any of the commanders; I believe he ranked everybody but me, I have heard that Gen. Fremont resigned in consequence; I do not think Pope ranked McClellan or McDowell; I mean, I think Pope ranked all the officers I conversed with except McClellan.

Q.—Was there not among the officers of the Army of the Potomac an indisposition to withdraw from the Peninsula? Do you not think that this indisposition went far to disincline the officers to coöperate with Gen. Pope.

A.—I do not think that had anything to do with it; two-thirds of the Army of the Potomac I talked with—yes, three-quarters—were decided that it ought to be done; I think the majority of the general officers thought the withdrawal from the Peninsula ought to be done; I went down in a steamer from Harrison's Landing, and the officers I met urged and argued with me the necessity of that decision; I should not think it proper for me to give an order to Porter after he joined the command of Pope, but I should not have hesitated to make a request for information; I am quite satisfied that the information given me in Gen. Porter's dispatches, concerning the actual state of the Army of Virginia, was correct; I have that impression from information I received at the time, and from what I have since heard while I was with McClellan; at one of the bridges over the Chickahominy, where I had been sent by order of Gen. Halleck, a message came from Porter to McClellan, stating that he had ordered the wagons arriving at Williamsburgh to pass on, and had started his command, I think, in the direction of Newport's News, with a view of facilitating matters in getting out of the way; McClellan was at the time displeased with reference to the move, and said that it was not his intention for Porter to move until Franklin came up; the army was in process of crossing; I remained there until just as the rear guard passed over, when, if I mistake not, Gen. McClellan expressed to me his gratification that so much of the army was out of the way; I afterwards met Porter at Old Point Comfort, where his troops had concentrated, and were passing aboard the vessels; I said to him I thought it very fortunate that he had moved the portion of the army as he had done, because that would enable me to move the balance sooner; the vessels could come back for more troops; if I mistake not, Porter left for Aquia Creek very late in the evening, with the intention of joining his command that night; I am sure he was sick, either then or before he started; when he was ordered to go he was lying on my bed; I am not certain about the time he left.

Q.—State whether, as far as you know, the opinions of the officers you heard as to Pope's ability to carry on that campaign were founded upon the character of the orders he issued after taking command?

A.—I heard those orders very much ridiculed, but I do not think they had sufficient influence in the formation of the opinions of the officers.

Gen. Butterfield, of Gen. Porter's Corps, was next sworn, and stated that he was present when the order from Gen. Pope arrived, directing Gen. Porter to march at one o'clock A. M., on the 28th of August. Porter, he said, having sent out his aids to explore the road, was convinced by their reports of the impracticability of starting before daybreak, and decided accordingly. He gave an account of the march from Ellis Ford to Bristow, during the latter part of August, and of the fatigue of the soldiers thereon, and believed Gen. Porter had performed his whole duty.

Gen. Buford, Chief of Cavalry to the Second Corps of Porter's army, was called in, and briefly questioned with reference to the report he made to Gen. McDowell on the 29th of August of the presence of a large force, under Gen. Longstreet, near Gainesville. He stated that he thought they had come through Thoroughfare Gap, and that they had approached from the direction of Gainesville about 9 or 10 A. M.

Adjourned.

THE McDOWELL COURT OF INQUIRY.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

In the McDowell Court of Inquiry, to-day, three documents, sent by Gen. McCLELLAN, were read. They consisted of letters of instructions to Gen. BANKS and Gen. WADSWORTH, dated March 16, 1862, and a letter to Adjt.-Gen. THOMAS, dated on board the Commodore, April 1, 1862, stating the position of affairs on the Potomac at that time. From this latter document it appears that on going to the Peninsula Gen. McCLELLAN left the following disposition of troops for the defence of Washington:

At and near Warrenton	7,780
At Manassas	10,850
In the Shenandoah Valley	35,467
On the Lower Potomac	1,350
Making in all	55,447

The Court adjourned until Monday next, to enable the Recorder to bring up his record.

Loyal Creditors vs. Rebel Debtors.

The following important order has been issued by Brig.-Gen. EGBERT L. VIELE, Military Governor of Norfolk:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY GOVERNOR AND GENERAL COMMANDING, NORFOLK, Dec. 13, 1862.

It appearing to me that on the 19th day of March, 1860, JOHN N. COOKE & Co., of the City of Portmouth, Va., made and executed their promissory note, whereby they promised to pay to J. R. JAFFRAY & SONS, or order, without offset, $697 59, negotiable and payable at the Bank of Virginia, at Portsmouth, Va., with exchange on New-York.

It further appearing that on the 19th day of March, 1860, the said JOHN N. COOKE & Co. were indebted to the said J. R. JAFFRAY & SONS, for merchandise, in the further sum of two dollars and thirty-seven cents; and that on the 19th day of September, 1860, in the further sum of four hundred and five dollars and five cents, which several sums the said JOHN N. COOKE & Co. refuse to pay.

The said JOHN N. COOKE & Co. admit the original liability as above stated, and do not claim payment or offset, but they assign as a reason for not paying that they are citizens of the State of Virginia, and, as such, owe allegiance to the so-called "Confederate States of America," and that they have been released and discharged from the obligations of their contract by a law of the said "Confederate States," whereby all debts and liabilities due and owing by the citizens of Virginia to the loyal citizens of the United States are sequestered to, and for the use of, the said "Confederate States."

I do not deem this excuse a defence or justification for the refusal to pay; but, on the contrary, this sham defence is treasonable per se; the Government of the United States is supreme within the limits of this command, and if the citizens are not loyal in sentiment, they shall not set up and assert the authority of the usurpers; this would be recognizing an imperium in imperio. No vested rights have grown out of the rebellion, and if I should countenance this defence, and hold that the traitors have the power to release a citizen of Virginia from the obligation of his contract, it would subvert the Constitution of the United States.

Not deeming this a defence, or justifiable reason for refusal and delay of payment:

It is therefore ordered that the said JOHN N. COOKE & Co. forthwith pay to the said J. R. JAFFRAY & SONS the following sum of money, in the current funds of the United States—$1,277 62.

And it is further ordered, that in case the said JOHN N. COOKE & Co. shall neglect or refuse to pay, as above directed, then the Provost-Marshal will immediately take possession of the goods and chattels of the said JOHN N. COOKE & Co., so that the said sum of money shall be made out of the sale of the said goods and chattels.

Brig.-Gen. and Military Governor of Norfolk.

The remaining appointments on the Staff, yet uncompleted, are Commissary-General, Surgeon-General, Commissary-General of Subsistence, Paymaster-General, and three Aids. WOOL—The movements in this line, during the past month, Messrs. TALLKAMPF & KITCHING, review thus: "During the month of December there was a fair demand for fine and medium Domestic Fleece, and Pulled Wools, at full prices. The coarse qualities have, however, been in less request, and prices are low. The stock of all descriptions of Domestic Fleece and Pulled Wools is remarkably light, and the same we learn is the case with the stock in our other markets, and in the interior. California Wools have accumulated, and the bulk of them consists of medium and lower qualities. Being held above buyers' views, but little has been done with them. Cape, Mesizo, and other fine Foreign Wools, were more looked after, and some important sales of Cape and Mestizo have lately been made, partly for consumption, but mostly for investment and on speculation. More would have been done if holders had been less firm. We have to report some considerable shipments to Europe, principally Mestizo—say about 500 bales in all. Foreign medium, and low medium Wools, are slow of sale at easier prices, as the demand for Government contracts has ceased. Holders nevertheless, of an improvement, but to a loss on their stock. Foreign descriptions of Wool, used for carpet purposes, have been in good demand, and the prices well maintained. Considerable quantities, some of which to arrive, have been bought by the carpet manufacturers. The imports during the previous month fell off largely, and will be smaller still in this and next month. How much greater the consumption of Wool has been the past year, in comparison to the former ones, may soon be ascertained by the very light stock now left of domestic and of common foreign Wools. The stock of foreign medium qualities will scarcely cover our wants for a three months' supply to come. The stock of Cape and Mestizo is our largest, but as fine Wools will now be more wanted, it may be considered very fortunate to be supplied for even three or four months as the prices in Europe have risen to a point sufficient to exclude us from those markets; and in consequence of the state of the European markets, the advance in the wool-growing countries will interfere with direct imports. In fact, the European markets are represented as light in stock. Prices are fully maintained, with the exception of some coarse and faulty medium, the valuations of which have been run too high by speculation. The London auction of Colonial wools terminated on the 13th of December. The advance at the commencement of 1½d.@2d. on Australian, and 1d.@1½d. on Cape, being maintained. Of the 74,000 bales offered, but little appears to have been withdrawn. The Imports of Wool into New-York for the first months of 1862, were 37,153 bales, 16,496,136 lbs. Since July 1, 1862, to Dec. 29, 1862, 31,648 bales, 20,851,377 lbs. Total, 68,801 bales, 37,347,413 lbs."

MEDICAL.

SURE CURE—BY DR. POWERS, SUCCESSOR only consulted with Dr. WARD, No. 12 Laight-st. Conducted on the plan of the Hospital des Veneriens, Paris, where those afflicted with any form of private disease can receive prompt treatment, without risk or exposure, viz.: Syphilis, gonorrhœa, gleet, strictures, ulcers, tumors, cancers, secondary and constitutional syphilis, diseases of the kidneys, &c., &c. Thirty years of extensive practice, exclusively devoted to the treatment of those complaints enable us to effect cures in cases where others of less experience have failed. Dr. Powers' Essence of Life restores the vigor of youth in four weeks. This marvelous agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitutions—physical disqualifications, impediments to marriage, thereby speedily cured. The men to consult, Drs. Ward and Powers, the champions and kings of venereal diseases, possessing the most certain, speedy and only effectual remedies in the world, guarantee a perfect cure, or no charge, in from one to three days. Established in 1840, N. B.—Those who have used their preventives are never without. Send for a circular. To Ladies.—Dr. Powers' Periodical Drops are a safe and certain remedy for monthly irregularities. The above remedies sent by mail. The afflicted should read their circular. Postage free, on receipt of a three-cent stamp.

PRIVATE DISEASES CURED IN THE shortest possible time, by DR. WARD & CO., No. 12 Laight-st., near Canal, without the use of Mercury, loss of time or change of diet. Dr. WARD, from the hospitals of London, Paris and Edinburgh, is the discoverer of the only certain and reliable remedies for diseases of a private character. In 25 years' practice he has cured more cases of Secret Diseases and Wrong Treatment than all others combined. I can and will cure you in less time and at less expense than any one can or will, and those who have been robbed of their money and health, call; it will take but little money and time to restore you. If you have been unfortunate, call at once. By his special experience in this much-neglected branch of medical science, he is enabled to guarantee a cure in the most complicated cases. Recent cases of Gonorrhœa or Syphilis cured in a few days, without change of diet or hindrance from business. Secondary Syphilis—the last vestige eradicated without the use of Mercury. Involuntary emissions stopped in a short time. Sufferers from impotency, or loss of sexual power, restored to full vigor in a few weeks. Permanently and speedily cured by a new treatment. Persons at a distance, failing to receive prompt treatment elsewhere, may get a permanent cure effected by writing a full diagnosis of their case, addressed to DR. WARD & CO., No. 12 Laight-st., the only place.

THE VIGOR OF YOUTH IS RESTORED by Dr. POWERS' ESSENCE OF LIFE OR INVIGORATING ELIXIR, and Dr. Powers' Radical Pills or Physical Regenerator. Young man! Are you subject to that soul and body destroying disease resulting from secret habits? Dr. POWERS' Invigorating Essence and Radical Pills briefly cure the very worst cases, while innocent of anything deleterious, and are warranted a never-failing cure. Prepared and sold by WALTER TOWERS, M.D., No. 12 Laight-st., New-York. Afflicted, try them. They will certainly cure. Send for circular; first, read it carefully, and then you will send for the remedies.

IMPORTANT TO THE MARRIED AND THOSE ABOUT TO BE MARRIED.—Dr. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women, has just published the 160th edition of the valuable book, entitled "THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION," strictly intended for those whose health or circumstances forbid a too rapid increase of family. Price $1. Sold at his office, No. 129 Liberty-st., New-York; or can be sent by mail, free of postage to any part of the United States and Canada, by inclosing $1, and addressing Box No. 1,221 New-York City. For sale by H. RICHARDSON, at No. 1 Vesey-st., (Astor House,) and No. 18 Ann-st.; FEDERHEN & CO., 13 Court-st., Boston.

AN ACT OF GRATUITUDE—20,000 COPIES of a medical book for gratuitous circulation, by a sufferer, who has been effectually cured of nervous debility, loss of memory and dimness of sight, resulting from early errors, by following the instructions given in a medical work, considered it his duty, in gratitude to the author, and for the benefit of consumptive and nervous sufferers, to publish the means used. He will, therefore, send free, to any address on receipt of two 3-cent stamps, a copy of the work, containing every information required. Address Box No. 470 Post-office, Albany, N. Y.

DR. HUNTER'S RED DROP RESTORES the vigor of youth in four days. Restores manhood to the most shattered system. No. 3 Division-st., New-York, the only place. Beware of bogus Dr. Hunters. The City is full of knaves, up to every trick to rob Dr. HUNTER of his great reputation as a skillful and reliable physician. He has no other office but No 3 Division-st. Established in 1834.

SOMETHING FOR EVERY LADY.—DR. WARD'S Great Female Benefactor or Golden Regulating Pills. Infallible in correcting, regulating and removing all obstructions, from whatever cause, designed for purely legitimate purposes—to restore the menstrual fluid—and they will never disappoint the anxious patient. Office, No. 12 Laight-st., where Dr. WARD can be consulted, confidentially, day and evening.

HAMMOND ON DISEASES OF THE NERVOUS SYSTEM, URINARY and SEXUAL SYSTEMS.—New and infallible treatment. By C. B. HAMMOND, M.D., formerly Professor of Special Anatomy and Surgery in the Syracuse Medical College, New-York, author of "Medical Information for the Million," &c. Price $5, mailed. WARREN & CO., Publisher, No. 1 Vesey-st.

DR. JOHNSON, NO. 14 DUANE-ST., MAY be consulted with confidence on private diseases. Thirty years in one locality enables him to guarantee speedy and permanent cures. N. B.—Those who may have been misled by quack advertisements, nostrums, &c., can call on Dr. J., with the certainty of receiving honorable treatment.

SULPHUR AND VAPOR BATHS—ESTABLISHED IN 1836—the only genuine baths in the United States, at No. 1 Carroll place, Bleecker-st., corner of Laurens, for cure of rheumatism, mercurial affections, &c. Given daily by Dr. A. L. TIMOLAT & CO.

DR. CALDER, AUTHOR OF THE "PRIVATE Medical Practice," No. 134 Bleecker-st., west of Broadway. Those who apply in the earlier stages will be surprised at the ease and rapidity of the cure.

PRIVATE CONSULTATION.—DR. HUNTER has, for thirty years, confined his attention to diseases of a certain class, in which he has treated no less than fifty thousand cases, without an instance of failure. His great remedy, HUNTER'S RED DROP, cures certain diseases, when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without confining or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six hours; cures when all the dreadful consequent effects of mercury, but possesses the peculiarly valuable property of annihilating the rank and poisonous taint that the blood is sure to absorb, unless his remedy is used. This is what he claims for it, and what no other will accomplish. In view of this respect has become so well known, that scientific men in every department of medical knowledge begin to appreciate it, for hardly a week passes that he is not consulted by druggists, chemists and physicians, in regard to some pitiful patient who has exhausted the whole round of the faculty, and still the disease will appear. Its popularity is so great, that there is not a quack doctor in the City that has not attacked it; and when they find their lies are not so easily swallowed, they then pretend that they can make it. It is $1 a vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 3 Division-st. Book for 15 three-cent stamps, 300 pages, 100 colored illustrations. The best work out.

THIS EVENING AND EVERY EVENING, UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.
The scenery, costumes and appointments of "Faust and Marguerite" are unsurpassable; some scenes Mr. Selwyn seems to have painted as if he meant them to be framed for an art gallery, so perfectly has he finished them.—New-York Herald.
"Faust and Marguerite" is brilliant to the last degree. It affords several of the most elaborate and striking scenic displays that have ever been presented in New-York. The mounting of the piece is superb, the scenery throughout magnificent, the dresses rich and tasteful and full of variety. The best drama ever written would hardly need to be better put upon the stage.—New-York Tribune.
We have no recollection of a production that combined more admirably a spectacle with the positive feeling of a work of art. Mr. J. B. Roberts, an actor of reputation, as Mephistophiles, gave a remarkably strong and sinister interpretation to that potentate's character. He is, beyond all doubt, the best representative of his part we have had here.—New-York Times.

DEPREDATIONS OF THE ALABAMA.

Mismanagement in Our Navy—What is Needed for Success.

NEW-YORK, Monday, Dec. 29, 1862.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is only when some great disaster occurs that the mind of the public and of Congress can be attracted to the defects in the administration of our public affairs which lead to such results; and as soon as the excitement produced by some such disgraceful example of our folly as the present impunity of the Alabama affords, has subsided, the authors of our disgrace hold up their heads again and proceed to reproduce the cause which will indefinitely reproduce disasters. Shall the present excitement bring us no better results? If not, I see no hope for our navy in the future—nothing but miserable inefficiency and constant national disgrace.

The fact now stands before the world that the rebel Government has a cruiser at sea, carrying a sufficient armament for most purposes, which defies the entire navy of the United States, —which paralyzes commerce, and compels us to transport our precious metals from one of our States to another in English ships, and through England itself, although we have some hundreds of war steamers, and are building as many more of the same kind as can be supplied with machinery by all the machine-shops of the country. The explanation of this shameful fact is simple, and if Congress would attend to it the difficulty would not long be continued.

The whole reason why the Alabama can sail up to our coast with impunity, is her superior speed. In the war of 1812, the Constitution was the pride of our navy, and the terror of the enemy. Why? Simply because she could outsail the English ships. The enemy had many vessels of greater battery power—could hunt her with whole fleets of vessels her equals in power; but the Constitution never went to any fight in which she was inferior to the enemy, and never missed any fight in which she was superior. The whole British fleet had her becalmed in their presence off the Jersey shore, and if they could have persuaded her to stay, would have captured her, of course; but the breeze sprang up, and she sailed away, hovering near the flock of her pursuers, until she picked up some of them that had got separated from their fellows, and she might have continued that game for a year with safety. The lesson the Constitution taught falls now upon listless ears, until it is repeated at our expense, to our shame and ridicule, by a foe who have no harbors, and but one man-of-war.

The Alabama is said to have a speed of "fourteen knots." She carries a light armament of heavy guns, and a crew of 130 men. With that speed she can carry her light armament and small crew away from or up to any proper war steamer, with two exceptions, perhaps, (and they are old ships,) in the service of the United States, and the Vanderbilt is the only temporary war steamer, outside of the regular navy, which can come up with her. The San Jacinto was lying in the neutral harbor of Martinique with the Alabama. She had a crew of five hundred men, and a heavy armament; but of what use were they? The Alabama sailed away and left her! The Navy Department may feel happy in contemplating the great battery and the noble crew of fighting men on board that ship; but without the power to carry them to the enemy, they are but a useless expense to the people, and in effect a discredit rather than an honor to our country. What happened to the San Jacinto will happen to every other ship of the navy, with, perhaps, two exceptions, if they ever fall in with the Alabama; and if the Vanderbilt meets her, and she can go fourteen knots, as they say, the chances are, that in a stern chase, she will disable the Vanderbilt's engines before she can be overtaken; for it must be remembered that the Vanderbilt cannot maintain a speed to exceed fifteen knots.

The question, of course, comes, why is it that our entire navy wants the speed necessary to cope with such a ship as the Alabama, or such a hundred of others belonging to other nations; and it can only be answered by declaring the willful stupidity and ignorance of the two departments of the navy which produce our men-of-war —the Engineering and Construction Bureaux.

Speed in a steamer is simply the measure of the relation between power and weight; and higher speed results only from diminishing weight or increasing power or both. Good model is the result of light weight, in proportion to the length and width of the ship; for within certain limits of length and width it is apparent that every pound of added weight either sinks the ship deeper in the water, or requires a "fuller model" to sustain it at a fixed draft, and in either case requires more power to drive it.

Before the present Administration came into power, the preceding ones had built only a few steamers, and had, among others, produced the Iroquois, a second-class sloop, built on plans furnished by a shop in this city. I mention her name because she has become somewhat famous for her good qualities and her speed; and I observe in the Herald, to-day, her name mentioned as the only one of the screw steamers of the navy which could overtake the Alabama. The Iroquois, however, is not a particularly good steamer, but she is so much better than all the recent ships of the navy, as to make them perfectly ridiculous by comparison. The merit of the Iroquois consists not in lightness or model, but in her power; and her superiority in that is produced by working steam expansively, and using the best form of slide-valve "cut-off" now known. In other particulars, she does not differ materially from the ships of her class since built.

When Mr. LINCOLN came into power, he appointed as Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy Mr. ISHERWOOD—a person who had qualified himself by active political service, and was at the time one of the Engineers of the Navy. This person had recently made himself somewhat notorious by publishing a book, in blue and gold binding, announcing the remarkable discovery, made exclusively by him, that there was no advantage in using a "cut-off" on steam-engines, and that all the engineers of the world, from JAMES WATT down, were ignorant in comparison with the author of that blue book. Of course, every one who ever paid the coal bills for a steam-engine knows how utterly false this is; and I have too much respect for Mr. ISHERWOOD'S knowledge of what is well known in every steam mill in the country by the most ignorant, to suppose that he believes it himself. But the book, the only book, by the way, I ever had, in which every material proposition, without exception, is demonstrably false), looked scientific, and Mr. ISHERWOOD was appointed Engineer-in-Chief. The law under which this appointment was made did not give the President much choice, for this same Mr. ISHERWOOD claims the merit of having got a provision into a statute requiring the Engineer-in-Chief to be appointed from the engineers of the navy—of whom he was one—whereof the number of eligible candidates was very small. Under this law the best engineer in the world cannot become Engineer-in-Chief, unless he will first become an engine-driver in the Navy; and if the Committee who passed it, had any theory, it must have been, either that no more knowledge is needed to control the construction of a navy, than is required to qualify an engine-driver for a ship; or else, that the United States had in its service under the humble guise of engine-drivers, a body of engineers competent to decide the difficult and complex question of construction, each one of whom, if out of the service, could earn much more than his wages as an engine-driver, in the intellectual and agreeable employment of studying the laws which control such questions, and in improvising engines for others' uses. Or, perhaps, like the Japanese grandees, who came on board Commodore PERRY'S steamer at Jeddo, and were struck with such awe at the supposed power of the engine-driver—who with a crowbar was working the valves of the engine to allow the steam to drive it—that they offered to purchase such a man for a large sum of money, our legislators had the impression that the engine-drivers, who run our machines, must necessarily know all about the laws of steam and dynamics, and be qualified to construct as well as to drive an engine. But whatever may have been their reasons, they have made it impossible for the Government to have the services of any one as Constructing Engineers for the navy, except some person whose talents, up to the time of his appointment to this very important duty, have been of no more value to himself or to the world, than to be spent upon the very useful, but extremely simple problem, of "standing around" a steam engine so many hours a day, while the firemen kept it moving by feeding the furnaces with coal; and so Mr. LINCOLN had to appoint one of these—and that one was ISHERWOOD.

Having printed it in a book that a cut-off is of no use, (although there is not a steamboat, nor a factory of any size in the United States, driven by steam, which does run or can run successfully without a cut-off,) Mr. ISHERWOOD at once proceeded to put his discovery into practice, and tried his 'prentice hand on the "gunboats." The history of those engines, if it were not so suggestive of national disgrace, would be laughable. Instead of making, or permitting others to make, engines as good at least as those of the Iroquois, he had the plans drawn at Washington, photographed and distributed to the various shops; and they were to go without a cut-off. It was given out that the gunboats would be very fast, (the blue book said so,) and public expectation was at the highest. When the boats started, however, they were very slow and very expensive of fuel; besides being afflicted with other disorders, which may be better described by the term that the physicians use when the diseases are numerous and incurable—"a complication of disorders." These engines were the first, I believe, which were designed at Washington. Before then the method was to invite proposals, accompanied by drawings, from the whole country, and then a Board of "Engineers" sat to select the plan out of all presented—thus exercising a function of very inferior importance to that of creating the plans—and the engines were built by those who designed them. But Mr. ISHERWOOD knew better than that—he had it all in his book, bound in "blue and gold," and he invited no other man to aid the Government. If he had, the builders would have guaranteed results, and the Government would only have paid for what it got. Now, the only redress is to be found in reading the book, where any one can see that Mr. ISHERWOOD is right, and if the ships won't go, so much the worse for the ships.

There are some circumstances about these gunboats which are very suggestive, and I will mention them here, leaving others to draw the inferences. There is a plan of boilers known as "Martin's boilers," for which Mr. MARTIN got a patent from the Patent-office, when he was Engineer-in-Chief. These boilers, from their construction, must be high, and if used in the gunboats must rise above water, and subject the men to a certain and horrible death by scalding, if the ship should be struck midships by a shot in action. Numerous other forms of boilers could be used as good as these, and yet be below water, but no patent fee could be got for them. Mr. ISHERWOOD required the contractors who made these engines to use these boilers, and to pay Mr. MARTIN his fee for the patent before they could get their money from the Government. The patent, however, does not belong to Mr. MARTIN, but to Mr. MONTGOMERY, to whom the Patent-office issued it over the one granted to Mr. MARTIN, upon proof that he and not Mr. MARTIN was the inventer—and so the record stands this day—yet Mr. ISHERWOOD compelled the builder to pay Mr. MARTIN for a boiler which ought never to have been used at all, and the title to which, if it were to be used, was, by the judicial decision of the Government, acting through the Patent-office, in another man. Mr. MONTGOMERY has demanded his fees for it over again, but as the Government, by its Engineer-in-Chief, has compelled the builders to pay another man for his property, they refuse to pay him, and so he is defrauded. What does that mean?

Mr. SEWELL has a patent for a particular way of making tight the ends of the tubes used in a "surface condenser," and upon the strength of that patent is supposed by some to be the inventor of a surface condenser itself. His way of tightening the tubes is not a particularly good way, in my opinion, and certainly not so good as a well-known way of doing it which has been in use for thirty years. Mr. SEWELL, like Mr. MARTIN, is also an Ex-Engineer of the Navy, and Mr. ISHERWOOD'S particular friend. When the placer for the engines were given out, a surface condenser called "SEWELL'S," was required, and the contractor compelled to pay him his fees before they got their money. The object of the surface condenser is to make fresh water for the boilers, but when the first of these machines started, it refused to perform that office, and the boilers were as salt as if no such machines were used. That it must have been so, is manifest enough from the drawings, without seeing it tried; that it is so, every one knows who knows the boats. Yet from that time to this, every other gunboat has the same machine in it, although, one after the other, they have all produced the same result. If any one wishes to know the facts in detail, let the builders be examined, or let the engineers of the boats be called and sworn. But while money is thus paid on compulsion for a machine which every builder and every engineer knows to have proved itself worse than useless in all their gunboats, Mr. PIRSSON is the inventor of a condenser—not of a way of packing the tubes of one—and there was, and now is, unless destroyed, a certificate on file in the Navy Department at Washington, by Mr. ISHERWOOD himself, that he used that condenser three years on the engines of the San Jacinto, when he was driving them, and that the water kept so fresh all that time in the boilers that no salt was ever blown off.

The cost of making these SEWELL'S condensers is so much more than that of making PIRSSON'S, that Mr. PIRSSON has informed me that he would be content to take the difference of cost for his patent fee—thus saving the other fee, and securing a well-known and efficient instrument. And to make the complication complete, these condensers so used under the name of SEWELL'S are a plain infringement of one of Mr. PIRSSON'S patent, and he has demanded compensation for the use of it. What does all this mean?

The great merit claimed for these engines is not having a cut-off, was their simplicity—a merit which, when the engine-drivers on duty wear gold lace, a sword and gloves, and set the firemen to be engine-drivers, I am compelled to allow as necessary to be attained; but when several of these boats were required to go up the river from New-Orleans, they were broken down in their valve-gear, the very part where simplicity was so commended. And on the trial trip of one of these boats in New-York, the valve-gear was of such a very simple construction that the boat could not be stopped, and it ran over and sank a vessel loaded with shell at the Navy-yard, costing thereby a large sum of money for simplicity.

And then, to complicate still further the diseases of these unfortunate gunboats, the Bureau of Construction lent a hand; and, when the boats were launched, they drew about a foot more water than they were calculated and coppered to draw, thus showing that the constructor could not guess within about 200 tons the weight of vessels which ought to have been known to an inch. It was laughable enough to see them, as I saw them, coppering this top foot after the boats were overboard, by floating around them on a raft. Of course, if the Government had called upon the builder who built these boats to construct them so that they would only draw the fixed draft, and yet carry the required weight, it would have been done; but the Bureau of Construction knew better than that, and furnished the models themselves, and we have the gunboats.

The same operations which so signally failed on these gunboats, have been repeated on the sloops, and the general result is that the speed has fallen off below the standard reached before this reign of ignorance and presumption began; and now we see an enemy we are accustomed to despise, flying his flag in the face of our navy with impunity upon a war steamer which can go to its own fights and stay away from any one's else, as it pleases; and when we ask for speed to pursue him, we must find it either in vessels built years ago, or in private ships temporarily used, whose machinery is liable to be disabled at once by a broadside.

And now, Mr. Editor, is it not time that this system should be stopped? Either go back to the plan of inviting and using the talent of the whole country, and confine the Engineer-in-Chief to the duty of regulating the stations and services of the other engine drivers in the navy, as before Mr. ISHERWOOD'S time it was; or offer a compensation for the service of some scientific engineer, which will command the abilities necessary to deal with these difficult problems, and exclude from the place men who use it rather to promote the personal interest of their particular friends than to increase the power of the country in its struggle for existence as one of the family of nations. Will not Congress look to it that these outrages cease?

Of course, Mr. Editor, I know that in making this exposure I shall incur the enmity of a class interested in maintaining the present order of things. I have no other interest in it than to serve my country, if possible, by pointing out the true path to follow in this particular branch of its service; and knowing, as I do, the miserable results which have flowed from the present system, I could not conscientiously allow this present moment to pass without saying at least as much as I have said. When I see a man who certainly could not get employment in any private concern to decide any question of engineering, raised from the respectable, but humble position of an engine-driver, to the responsible and important duty of fixing the character of our navy, on his own responsibility, and without appeal for the next generation; and when I see that man shutting the door against all the ability of the country, while at the same time he pronounces presumptuously, that all the world's science is at fault in regard to a vital question affecting the speed of the navy, and when I see him spending hundreds of millions of the public money upon the faith of this presumptuous dogma of his own, unsupported by any man of recognized knowledge in the world, and in the face of notorious innumerable facts to the contrary, I should think myself an unworthy citizen if I longer kept silence. Whether in the clash of arms, and in the general decay of public honesty, I shall be heard, of course I cannot foresee, but at least I have done my duty. VINDEX.

N.B.—Since writing the above, I have ascertained the particulars of the failure of the four sloops-of-war built by Mr. ISHERWOOD, which have just been completed. They are of the class of the Iroquois. Their names are the Ossipi, Juniata, Monongahela and Lackawanna.

The Ossipi made a number of trial trips, and was at last pronounced fit for service, and sent to sea. She reached Fortress Monroe in a damaged state—her Sewell condenser broken down, and her valves, made for simplicity, so cut by their own action as to be unfit for use. A Board of Engineers has condemned her condenser.

The Monongahela was run at the dock at Philadelphia, and she has cut her "simple" valves so that she is unfit for use, and a large expense must be incurred before she will be ready to do it again.

The Juniata broke down twice on two trial trips, and now has cut her valves so as to be unfit for service.

The Lackawanna, at the Brooklyn Navy-yard, has been run at the dock, and has begun to cut her valves. She has not yet made her trial trip, but as she is just like all the others, no doubt she will have the same fate.

The disgraceful fact is that no one of these vessels—built, as they are, at immense cost, and with the best materials and workmanship which our shops can furnish—is fit for service, and that their failure is due simply to the ignorance of the plans on which they are built. And the astounding fact is true that, in the face of these results, other engines from the same drawing are being built, to still further disgrace our country and squander our money. Will not Congress investigate these facts? V.

THE ALABAMA.

Eighteen Men-of-War After Her—The Way Secretary Welles Has Slept—The Work of the Navy-Yards.

The failure of our naval vessels to capture the Alabama before this time has caused the most erroneous impressions to prevail relative to the doings of the Navy Department. The public has been so far misled in this matter that it is only right to state the facts of the case. Notwithstanding the still unchecked success of Capt. SEMMS, it is beyond contradiction that the history of the American, English or French Navy furnishes no parallel for the feats accomplished by our naval authorities in connection with the much-dreaded pirate. In times of peace we had six Navy-yards, which were pretty generally kept going, providing for the current wants of the forty men-of-war we used to have in commission. When war came upon us, Norfolk and Pensacola were swept away, leaving only New-York, Philadelphia, Boston and Portsmouth, N. H., (Washington being an ordnance yard chiefly,) available. And these have had to fit out a series of squadrons, in fifteen months, which could not be armed elsewhere in the same time. We have now over sixty vessels more in commission than England, and to keep their wants supplied, to keep them repaired always relieved at the proper time, and to have ships approaching completion as others wear out, is one item of the daily work of the four Navy-yards named. Besides doing it well, time has been found, within the brief space of three months, to equip a fleet for the purpose of overhauling the Alabama, which is now represented in every sea. In order to estimate the extraordinary energy required to accomplish this it is only necessary to know that not one vessel in forty at Mr. WELLES'S command would be worth anything for the business. The proper ships had to be first picked out, and as they all need great alterations, and as some of them were at the furthest end of the blockade, time was required to bring them home and put them in proper trim. And now, after twelve weeks' work, the following fleet is on the ocean, every vessel belonging to it a match for the Alabama, save in speed, and several well able to overhaul her:

Vessels.	How long out.	Screw or Paddle.
Chippewa	A few weeks	Screw
Dacotah	Four weeks	Screw
Juniata	Bound out	Screw

*Sent first after Sumter. †Called from Europe.

As the armament or tonnage of these ships is not given, it can convey no information to the enemy. Some of the vessels named were not fitted out especially for the duty they are now believed to be engaged in. Besides putting these craft in fighting and chasing condition, the aforesaid four Navy-yards have had to dispatch the following vessels for current blockade service, the neglect of which even the capture of the Alabama would not atone for:

Vessels.	Rate.	Work Done.
Alabama,	Purchased paddle,	Overhauled, in toto.
A. Houghton,	Store-ship,	Repaired.
America,	Yacht America,	Almost rebuilt.

Troja,	Steam gunboat,	Finished.
Unadilla,	Screw steamer,	Repaired.
Water Witch,	Paddle-wheel,	Repaired.
Wissahickon,	Screw-gunboat,	Repaired.

This is twelve weeks' work, but it does not include the new men-of-war now in progress, of which twelve or fifteen are building at the four Navy-yards. Nor does it include vessels fitted up elsewhere, and sent to the yards for "final preparations," which often occupy weeks, storeships were provisioned, transports commissioned and sent away, and other work done which should be performed if troops were to be fed or a blockade maintained.

We challenge any naval power in the world to show such a twelve weeks' work as this. Under the circumstances, the mere manning of such a fleet as ours, and keeping it supplied with beef, bread, butter, cheese, flour, raisins, apples, &c., is marvellous. France challenged the world to equal her sending off 14,000 men in transports, and about ten men-of-war, in two weeks. We have sent as many in a week, if the everlasting changing of crews, relieving and reshipping were taken into account.

While all these facts are true, it may seem strange that the energy and resources of the country cannot result in ridding the ocean of a pestering pirate. Officers of the highest standing give the following reasons for this:

First. In the Alabama everything is sacrificed for speed. It would not do to build men-of-war on that plan before the pirate's peculiarities were known, and since, the most expeditious constructor could not have completed her equal.

Second: The difficulty of finding one small ship on the wide ocean, especially when she can have as bright a lookout as her competitor, and can get out of the way with great alacrity.

Third: There is not in the United States, to be purchased for love or money, a steamer possessing the speed necessary to catch her, and at the same time the strength to catch her.

GRAND EMANCIPATION JUBILEE.

A Night-watch of Freedom at Shiloh Church Great Excitement and Rejoicing Among the Colored People—Prayers, Speeches, Songs, Dirges and Shouts.

In anticipation of the Emancipation Proclamation which the President is expected to issue to-day, the colored people of this City held a grand jubilee last night at Shiloh Presbyterian Church, corner of Prince and Marion streets. By 9 o'clock in the evening the church was filled to overflowing, nearly one-third of the audience being white. Rev. HENRY HIGHLAND GARNET, pastor of Shiloh Church presided, and among the speakers were Rev. S. C. JOCELYN, C. C. LEIGH, EDWARD GILBERT, JUNIUS C. MORELL, and others.

The ceremonies were opened at 10 o'clock by prayer from Rev. DANL. H. VANDEWOORT, colored. After this came a hymn, and the Chairman then introduced Rev. G. S. JOCELYN, who spoke of the progress of Emancipation throughout the world, instancing England, Turkey, Russia, the District of Columbia, &c. The most loyal people in this country he said were the blacks, and if the President's Emancipation Proclamation had been issued on the firing of the first gun at Fort Sumter the nation would have been saved the deluge of blood that had since flowed throughout the land. [Applause.] The next speaker was Hon. C. C. LEIGH who recounted the meritorious deeds of the black men in past ages, and exhorted his hearers to emulate their example, and show themselves worthy of the position among the races which they aspired to reach. Turning to the institution of Slavery in this country, he spoke in severe terms of the support it had received from a corrupt and hireling clergy. No vile debauchee, he said, had ever lived, no bold blasphemer, no scoffer from the purlieus of vice, up to the polished HUME or the wit VOLTAIRE, had ever inflicted such stabs upon our holy religion as these hireling priests, who make the Word of God speak in favor of that "sum of all villainies," American Slavery. [Great applause.] The speaker closed by expressing the love and veneration he had always entertained for the old flag of his country, which, now that it was about to be unfurled in the cause of universal freedom, was still more dear to his heart than ever before.

Mr. JULIUS C. MORELL was then introduced as a native of North Carolina, and said that, though he was born in the Old North State, he felt no particular pride in it, for he had seen many other places which he would have preferred to be born in. North Carolina, he said, was a very good place to be born in, and about excellent place to get out of. [Laughter and applause.] The speaker recounted many of the barbarities of Slavery that had come under his observation when a boy, and said that the present rebellion would have broken out long ago had it not been for the much reviled Abolitionists. The black men of the South were long ago maturing plans of a general uprising, which would have deluged the South in blood, but about that time the anti-Slavery societies of the North sprung up, and, through their preaching and promises, the slaves were induced to keep quiet. He, however, saw the finger of God in this delay. It was His design to chastise the nation for the great sin of Slavery ere the bond of the slave were broken. This was now being done by civil war, when almost every home throughout the land was filled with lamentation and mourning.

At the close of Mr. MORELL'S remarks, the Chairman, Mr. GARNET arose and said that he perceived a person in the audience who, if he should die in the next five minutes, would have done more to destroy this vile institution of Slavery than any man in the country—he referred to HORACE GREELEY. [Loud cheers for HORACE GREELEY, and cries of "GREELEY," "GREELEY."] When the tumult following the announcement of Mr. GREELEY'S name had subsided, Mr. GARNET stated to the audience that he should be obliged to take it all back; he was mistaken in the man; it was not Mr. GREELEY after all. [Great laughter.] He hoped the gentleman would not take it as an offence to be mistaken for Mr. GREELEY, for nobody would be ashamed to look like him.

A VOICE—Some of the most eminent writers have called Mr. GREELY handsome. [Great laughter.]

Mr. GARNET here announced that it lacked only 15 minutes of 12 o'clock, and at 5 minutes before 12 the audience would unite in silent prayer. Meantime, Mr. GILBERT would address the audience.

Mr. GILBERT commenced speaking, but had not gone far before he was requested to stop, as the time for prayer had arrived.

A solemn dirge was then played on the organ. At the close of which the whole audience knelt for five minutes in silent prayer.

At the expiration of that time the choir sang the hymn commencing, "Blow, ye trumpets blow, the year of jubilee has come;" in which the audience joined.

The Chairman then read a dispatch from Washington, saying that President LINCOLN would issue the Emancipation Proclamation at 12 o'clock M., to-day.

This announcement was greeted with the most tumultuous cheers, which lasted some minutes, and were followed by three cheers for ABRAHAM LINCOLN, three cheers for freedom, &c., &c. Mr. GILBERT then resumed his speaking, and threw a damper on the enthusiasm of the audience by commencing to grumble and find fault because the Proclamation was to be "issued as a military necessity, and not as an act of justice." His audience did not appear to sympathize with his troubles in that line, and he soon dried up.

Other speakers followed, and the jubilee was kept up to a late hour in the evening, the audience singing "Old John Brown" and other similar songs, shouting, praying and rejoicing.

The Chimes at Trinity.

RINGING THE OLD YEAR OUT AND THE NEW YEAR IN.

Everybody down town last night who had nothing to do, and a great many who make a special point of hearing the Chimes toll a requiem to the Old Year, and a welcome to the New, crowded the sidewalks of Broadway and Wall-street to hear Mr. JAS. E. ALLEN ring his accustomed changes on the bells of Trinity. At about a quarter to twelve the programme was commenced with variations on the full complement of eight bells; then followed the favorite tunes of "Hail Columbia," "Yankee Doodle," "Old Dog Tray," a grand medley, arranged by Mr. GEORGE F. BRISTOW, "Evening Bells," "Last Rose of Summer," "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean" and "Yankee Doodle;" the listening public being finally played to their several domicils to the plaintive melody of "Home, Sweet Home." The sky was clear overhead, and the gusts of wind that blew fitfully through the night made the pealing voices of the chimes surge, now mournfully, now merrily, over the lower part of the City. There ought to be a peal of bells up-town, to keep the chimes of Trinity in countenance.

Stuart's Reported Raid into Maryland a Hoax.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

This afternoon's Star says:

"There is no truth in the current story that STEWART'S Cavalry have crossed the Potomac into Maryland, telegraphed here last evening. The rumor grew out of the fact that night before last ten or twelve rebel guerillas crossed from Ball's Bluff over to Harrison's Island, probably designing a brief thieving expedition into Maryland; but seeing that their motions were observed from the North shore, they prudently returned into London County before daybreak. This is the whole truth concerning the "body of 1,500 Confederate cavalry" crossing the river into Maryland, over which secesh here was rubbing its hands last night.

BALTIMORE, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

Direct and reliable intelligence from Harper's Ferry and other points along the line of the Upper Potomac, shows that the reported rebel raid into Maryland is entirely untrue. A small body of WHITE'S Cavalry has been seen on the south bank of the Potomac, upon which a variety of wild reports of invasion were based.

From San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Wednesday, Dec. 31.

The year just closed is admitted by all as the most prosperous in the history of California, as far as mercantile and manufacturing interests are concerned. The agricultural and mining interest has never been in a better condition. The city and State are increasing rapidly in population and wealth.

Exchange on Atlantic cities is the same as on last steamer day. Currency Bills, 20@22 discount; Coin, 5@6 premium; Sterling Exchange has advanced to 47½@48 for bankers; Legal tenders, 82@84.

The King and Queen of the Sandwich Islands were confirmed at the so-called Reformed Catholic Church, Nov. 28. Bishop STANLEY and other English missionaries performed the ceremonies.
